Mr. Andrew H. Card, Jr.
Assistant to the President and
Deputy to the Chief of Staff
The White House

Dear Andy:

It was delightful seeing you again last week -- we both seem to be having a great time in our respective jobs for the President!

As we discussed, satellite television is the most effective tool for us to set the tone for upcoming events to support President Bush's foreign policy efforts. USIA has a state-of-the-art service which can cover the six continents, including 190 satellite receiving dishes at our embassies and overseas posts. Granting an interview with a major correspondent from a foreign country not only guarantees use of the interview abroad but adds credibility to the substance to be covered during the event.

The President could use satellite television in a number of ways to reach foreign television audiences:

- 1) Pre-Summit interviews with the national TV broadcaster of the country the President will be visiting. The interview should be taped five days before the President's departure and satellited and aired just prior to his arrival in that country.
- 2) Roundtable interviews with one correspondent from each foreign country targeted for a particular message. Prior to any meeting such as the US/USSR Summit or the annual meeting of the Industrialized Nations (the G-7), the President could conduct a thirty-minute interview with time equally divided between all of the participating correspondents. This type of interview can be satellited live overseas for immediate or delayed broadcast by the participating foreign TV network.
- 3) Short messages for an international conference or meeting where the President is unable to attend. The President could videotape a two-to-four-minute message to be played over a closed circuit or large screen projection system to the participants at the event. Lead time recommended is three weeks before the event.

Per your suggestions, USIA has the means to support the President's foreign policy efforts prior to these upcoming events. We can quickly adjust to any media or administrative time that may already be booked into the President's schedule. Our recommended format follows:

Informal Fireside Chat: as early as possible with four or five key European (West and East) television anchors. This would allow the President to lay out his policies and priorities for the coming year and outline his perspectives on the future.

Global Warming Conference February 6: A pre-recorded message to the delegates.

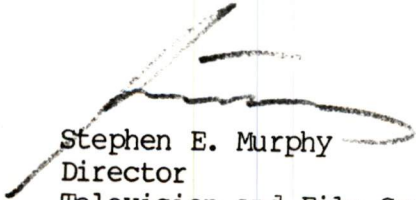

Drug Summit in Colombia February 15: A round table interview with a select group of correspondents from Andean media five days prior to his travel to Colombia.

Bush-Gorbachev Summit scheduled for late-June: A round table TV interview with a select group of West European, Japanese and perhaps East European TV correspondents. The President could also do a one-on-one interview with Soviet Television.

1990 Economic Summit of the Industrialized Nations: A round table interview with the TV correspondents from the other six participating nations.

USIA's Television and Film Service will carry the President's State of the Union address but can be as helpful to the President in many other areas. Worldnet has featured the Vice President and the First Lady in two teleconferences, well received by overseas television audiences, as well as many Administration spokespersons. Please let us know how we can be of further assistance with USIA's satellite television system.

With kind regards to you and your staff,

Stephen E. Murphy

Dear Sue:

As a former Director of the National Park Service, I was very disappointed to have you inform Anne and me that we have been stricken from the list of those able to visit the very special houses within the National Park System. I fully understand the regulations because I helped draft them when, as a special assistant to President Nixon, I had the clearance responsibility for all visitors to these houses. However, I always made exceptions for former Directors and was very pleased that the same courtesy was extended to me during the Reagan-Bush years.

For the record, since returning to Washington in 1981 to open the office for Korn/Ferry International, I have:

1. Chaired the 1984 Republican National Convention in Dallas, Texas, that nominated Ronald Reagan and George Bush.
2. Chaired the 1985 Inaugural for Ronald Reagan and George Bush.
3. Served on the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports.
4. Served as a member of the Official Delegation to the funeral of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of India.
5. Served as a member of the Official Delegation to the Olympics in Seoul, Korea.
6. Currently serve as Vice-Chairman of the Commission on the Bicentennial of the Constitution.
7. Served as an unpaid executive search consultant and advisor to the Office of Presidential Personnel.
8. Between 1981 - 1988, worked closely with both Secretary Watt and Secretary Hodel on matters of importance at the Department of Interior.

Ms. Sue Panagopulos

9. Served as an unpaid senior advisor to the 1988 Bush/Quayle campaign.
10. Served as a senior advisor to the Bush campaign for the 1988 Republican National Convention in New Orleans that nominated George Bush and Dan Quayle.
11. Served as a senior advisor to Bush-Quayle campaign.
12. Currently serving as a senior advisor for the 1990 Economic Summit in Houston.
13. Attended, and continue to attend, countless meetings and planning sessions when requested by administration officials.

My wife, Anne C. Walker served the Reagan-Bush administration as the Deputy Director of Congressional relations at the Consumer Product Safety Commission and as the Deputy Director of Public Affairs at the Department of Commerce. She is currently one of the twelve members of the National Park System Advisory board.

We both give freely of our time and energy to the President, his administration, and National Park Service and feel that time spent in the parks is beneficial to the system. I urge you to reconsider and reinstate our reservations for Camp Hoover, April 11 - 15 and Brinkerhoff, September 1 - 9, 1990.

Dear Andy;

Enclosed please find two copies of Insurance Review.
Actually, the guy on the left is really more to the right than can readily be perceived from the cover shot.

Bill gets around the country continuously and would like to get plugged into RNC fundraising efforts. He's in more boardrooms than there are Democrats in Massachusetts.
He can be a tremendous asset to Congressional candidates right now. Perhaps you could pass his address and phone to Atwater et al.

I've been doing a fair amount of public speaking at conventions of coaches, athletic directors and other sports professionals. Your boss is making my job easier.
We love hearing him talk about tort reform. It seems that one of the great challenges facing our ability to be competitive with the world involves our dealing with risk. Risk has become somewhat of a negative term.
Using sports as a vehicle to articulate these complex issues refocuses the debate in a more positive, proactive framework. ("You can't steal second with your

Keep the faith, hope to see you soon.

Dear Mr. Card:

A new decade brought an organization change for me but not an operating change. I continue to serve the communication needs of clients but under a new name -- Dwight Partners, Inc. -- and at a new address (see above).

My former associates in Clark Dwight Weinstock Inc. preferred to work with money center banks and international clients, requiring a New York City location. Rather than try to force a fit with our clients and locations, we are traveling separate ways.

The past two years in the business of creating communications strategies for clients to reach their audiences have been exhilarating and hugely satisfying. I have worked with clients in three broad areas, investor relations, media relations and market positioning. Dwight Partners, with Nancy Dwight as a principal, will add a political component to the mix along with an enhanced strategic planning capability.

We would be delighted to hear from you if you would like to talk about how Dwight Partners can help you.

Kunin raps Bush on clean-air bill al Governors' Association. Kunin is chairwoman of the association's energy and environment committee, which is pushing for a tough clean-air bill to reduce the threats of ozone depletion, global warming and smog.

Kunin's committee endorsed positions Monday calling for tougher auto emissions standards and the use of alternative fuels in cars and trucks.

But the real issue at the conference in Washington was the clean-air legislation under consideration by Congress and whether the bill would emerge from secret negotiations still strong — or weakened by special interests such as the coal, oil, natural gas and electric industries.

The largest special interest, according to Kunin and national environmental groups, might be the White House.

Mitchell urged Kunin to rally the governors to pressure senators and the White House to call for a strong bill.

Kunin, in a meeting, also urged Bush to consider the enormous cost of health problems due to air pollution, but said later Mitchell told her that White House aides dismiss that concept.

In Vermont, Kunin is facing the same sorts of complaints and concerns on her own clean-air bill. Two environmental groups criticized the governor Monday for backing away from tough standards in a Vermont Clean Air bill that would impose new taxes on utilities.

Kunin, although strongly supporting the goals of the bill, has often said that in a tight budget year she is opposed to placing any more new taxes on Vermonters than necessary to balance the budget.

The administration, therefore, opposes a tax on the burning of fossil fuels like coal, gas and oil because Kunin believes it would kill the bill in the Legislature.

"When we are raising so many taxes, it was tough (to add) any more on," Kunin said. "Next year I will be glad to consider it."

But the environmental groups said her reluctance would lead to the same health costs from air pollution that she urged Bush to consider.

"We have been disappointed that the administration has not supported some

Bush to convene warming session

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush on Monday invited representatives of the world's largest industrial nations, including the Soviet Union, to a mid-April conference in Washington on global warming and other environmental problems.

The conference, scheduled for April 17-18, will be "devoted to science and economics issues" involved in the controversy, according to a White House statement.

Bush, whose stance on global warming has been derided by environmentalists as too pro-industry, had promised such a session after his December meeting in Malta with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

About 20 nations were invited to the conference, including the world's major industrial powers and several nations, such as Brazil, with large land masses, aides said.

things and have actually proposed weakening crucial elements of the Vermont Clean Air act," Joan Mulhern said. She is legislative director of the Vermont Public Interest Research Group, an environmental and consumer group in Montpelier.

Mulhern and Ned Farquhar, associate director of the Vermont Natural Resources Council, fear the bill is too weak to be effective.

They said the fossil fuel tax would have raised $5.5 million a year and could mean revenue to pay for public transportation programs.

In addition, Mulhern said the administration had backed off tough fees on gas guzzling cars, a reordering of the state Transportation Agency's priorities and ways to make home appliances more efficient.

"Clean air is not a luxury we can afford in tough times," Mulhern said. "This is an investment we need to make."

Kunin: White House is weakening clean-air bill

Vermont Gov. Madeleine Kunin accused White House aides Monday of scheming behind the scenes to gut proposed clean-air legislation.

After a Washington, D.C., meeting with Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, a key leader in the fight to pass tough clean-air standards, Kunin said aides to President Bush — namely Chief of Staff John Sununu — were publicly supporting the legislation but privately opposing it.

"All the pressure for weakening the bill is coming from the White House," Kunin said after meeting with Mitchell. "Bush is sincere, but in this battle the devil is in the details and his people are fighting those details more than he is."

Kunin said she assured Mitchell in a one-on-one meeting that the nation's governors wanted a strong clean-air package.

Back home, however, critics of Kunin called a news conference Monday to accuse her of similarly deflating a clean-air bill for Vermont by refusing to go along with new environment-related taxes.

Dear Andy:

It was a pleasure meeting you at the recent Department of Commerce luncheon.

I thought you would enjoy reading an article about my current restoration project which appeared in a local Front Royal (VA) newspaper. I began this project shortly before I joined the Administration. Reference is also made in the article to my historic commercial building in Leesburg which has become somewhat of a landmark, due no doubt to the fact that my major tenant is The Washington Post.

I am also including a piece on Frederick Law Olmsted who understood so well the balance and harmony necessary between an individual and the environment.

Yours truly,

Pat Callahan

Workers strip this renovation project down to bare wood in anticipation of adding a fresh coat of paint as part of the finished product.

A South Royal renovation story: from Boston to D.C. and Leesburg, with a stop in Falmouth, Cape Cod

By Roger Bianchini

Front Royal News Staff Writer

THE renovation work taking place at the large Victorian house at 222 S. Royal Ave. is apparent to anyone who passes that way during the course of their travels through town.

What is not apparent on the surface, however, is the amount of care going into the project which will convert the building, used to house Marie's Hair Salon, into offices while maintaining what owner Patricia Callahan calls a "Victorian Nouvelle" atmosphere both inside and outside of the structure.

Originally from the Boston area, Ms. Callahan now resides in Washington, D.C., where she is a Bush Administration appointee in the Commerce Department.

She is taking on her second venture in the restoration of a Victorian era building. Her first project was in Leesburg.

She hopes to have the Royal Avenue project completed by late March or early April at which time she plans to have an open house to show the finished result of her work.

Plans call for two office suites to be located on the first floor, in addition to a foyer area at the front entrance.

The second floor may contain suites or smaller offices, depending on the need of prospective tenants. There will also be an office on the second floor that will be available for short-term leasing to a business or legal firm that might need to come into town for a limited amount of time.

This, she explains, will present an alternative to working out of a motel room.

► See HOUSE, page B2

Renovation project

Ms. Callahan explains "Victorian Nouvelle" as a combining of the elegant look and feel of the Victorian structure with modern conveniences available by today's standards.

On the "Nouvelle" side of the work, Ms. Callahan's project manager, Carl Siljeholm of Middleburg, is adding extra washrooms, bookshelves and kitchen space.

At the same time, many of the idiosyncratic design features of the Victorian house are being left intact. Among these are the fireplace mantle and stairway at the front entrance of the house which will present quite an unoffice-like feel upon entering the building which is believed to date back at least as far as 1900.

One of the historical items Ms. Callahan has learned about the building is that a wedding took place at that front area around the fireplace at some point in the distant past. For this and other reasons she is having her project manager work around the design problems presented by that space and incorporate the area into the finished product.

Ms. Callahan points to the importance of the relationship between her, as owner, and her project manager. In fact, the organization necessary to successfully complete a renovation project such as this is one of several points of similarity she sees between a successful political campaign and a renovation project.

Organization is necessary from the owners dealings with lawyers and bankers on one end to her contact with her project manager and his dealings with his sub-contractors. This is especially crucial when you are located, as she is, outside of the area, Ms. Callahan notes.

Even before organization, comes the key component of money. As Ms. Callahan states, "You need a lot of money, to have access to financing, you have to be well-funded." She points to the amount of energy politicians put into fundraising to keep their campaigns going.

Thirdly, she cites the need for an overall strategy. As the property owner, she must come up with a game-plan for the project just as a candidate must have a strategy in a campaign.

She says that the fourth similarity is an aberration of the third - the need for flexibility in your plan. The ability to adapt to changing conditions while maintaining a clear final goal in mind is a necessity in both politics and restoration, Ms. Callahan explains.

You can never anticipate everything that might or will happen during the term of your project, Callahan states.

The final analogy she makes is that you have to love what you are doing. It is that love of the work, she notes, that gets politicians to the Metro Station at 5 a.m. and motivates others to spend much of their time perusing run down, old buildings.

Both jobs take up the bulk of your time and the rewards are often far in the future, she says.

Ms. Callahan comes by her love of Victorian renovation honestly. Her family has invested in restoring Victorian structures in the Back Bay area of Boston for some 40 years.

Boston's Back Bay was built by Boston's wealthy merchant class between 1860 and 1890 on top of sewer flats that led to a terrible stench in the vicinity during the early days.

The Back Bay area became a Historical District in 1966.

Ms. Callahan's first venture into this type of investment on her own occurred when she purchased a late Victorian Italianate building that was housing a retail store in Leesburg in 1987.

The building at 21 N. King St., informally known as "The Press Building," had housed the Loudoun Times-Mirror offices and press from the 1920s to 1955 and stands across the street from the county courthouse.

It is now used for offices.

Ms. Callahan decided to invest in property in Front Royal out of a desire to get west of the Dulles corridor.

She feels that this community has a lot going for it from the surrounding natural beauty to a commitment of local officials to develop an independent industrial base that will not lead the area to become a "bedroom community" of Washington, D.C.

Ms. Callahan's philosophy of purchasing and renovating property is to try and enhance the community into which she invests. From her involvement in both politics and renovation she has developed a comprehensive concept of the environment.

The importance of lifestyle and community in context with growth and development is a function of both the individuals who make up that community and the political sphere in which it occurs, she says.

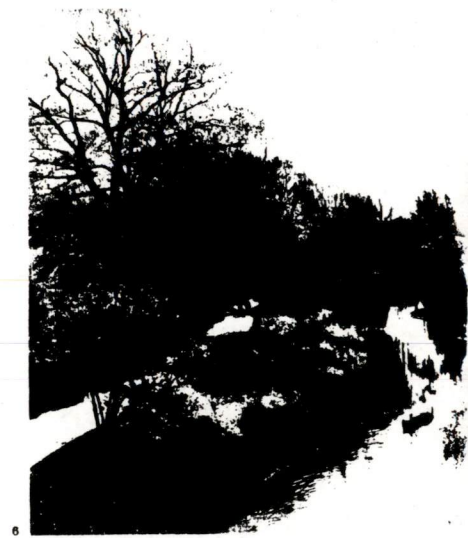

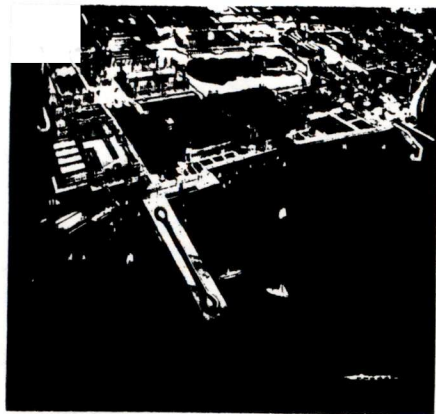

She says she feels fortunate to have run across what she refers to as "a Pygmalion" on Royal Avenue. Though the condition was rough, as she terms it, she saw the potential of the building as she entered and saw the front staircase and the layout of the building.

Ms. Callahan tells a final story on the restoration project. After consulting a book on the color concepts used in painting the outside of Victorian buildings she had narrowed her choice for her Front Royal address down to two when she came across the combination she was looking for on a bank in Falmouth on Cape Cod.

Though the building was not Victorian, it was painted along Victorian lines, she says.

After obtaining color samples, she was trying to match them with the wall of the bank one Saturday when she encountered some curious youngsters, who volunteered their services.

So, she points out, the beige and ivory color combination that will grace the outside of 222 S. Royal Ave. "is the result of a 9-year-old kid on a bike in Falmouth, Mass."

Frederick Law Olmsted, Sr. 1822—1903

All Bostonians have benefited from the work and vision of Olmsted. He created a park and parkway plan for the entire Boston area and within it an "Emerald Necklace" of parks, greenery, and tree-shaded roadway that begins with the Common and extends to Franklin Park in Dorchester. This felicitous linkage through Commonwealth Avenue, the Fens, the Muddy River, Jamaica Park, the Arnold Arboretum, and Franklin Park not only formed America's first metropolitan-scale park system but solved a practical problem, the drainage of the Back Bay Fens. Later Olmsted solved the urban traffic linkage of Commonwealth Avenue—the grand boulevard of Back Bay's grid—with Brookline's street system to the west.

In the eighties and nineties Olmsted did most of his work in and around the Boston area: for the municipal government, for Brookline, for colleges in Amherst and Northampton, for schools, railroads, and private institutions. During his professional lifetime Olmsted worked on a variety of projects that took him from coast to coast. The drinking fountains in Franklin Park were apparently as much his concern as the laying-out of a small city. His first major commission was the design of Central Park in New York in 1857, which marked the beginning of the profession of landscape architecture in America. Thereafter in a series of regional and community plans and designs for parks, recreational areas, university campuses and private estates, Olmsted established professional precedents that are still being followed, plans that are still being implemented, and an attitude toward the natural environment that is now once again being appreciated.

Olmsted combined in one person the capabilities of writer, social critic, civil engineer, farmer, and, most importantly, compassionate idealist. He was aware that, for the individual, nature exists "... for the mind, without fatigue and yet exercises it, tranquilizes it and yet enlivens it." He was equally aware that preservation of the entire urban social fabric depended on the city designed "to foster the harmonious cooperation of men in a community and intimate relationships and ... interdependence between families." He was troubled by urban neglect and the slums which are its consequence: "... the mere proximity of dwellings which characterize all strictly urban neighborhoods is a prolific source of morbid conditions of mind and body [today, read the need for drugs,] manifesting themselves in ... various functional derangements [today, read crime and violence]."

A prolific, hardworking organizer, Olmsted earned the deep respect of all his associates as well as the great names of the day. Charles Eliot Norton spoke these telling words at a dinner in 1893 honoring Daniel Burnham and the creators of Chicago's World's Columbian Exposition: "Of all American artists, Frederick Law Olmsted, who gave the design for the laying out of the grounds of the World's Fair, stands first in the production of great works which answer the needs and give expression to the life of our immense democracy." In heartfelt tribute Burnham concluded: "An artist, he paints with lakes and wooded slopes; with lawns and banks and forest covered hills, with mountain-sides and ocean views. He should stand where I do tonight, not for his deeds of later years alone, but for what his brain has wrought, and his pen has taught for half a century."

CONSTANCE M. BURNS NAMED ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF THE OLDER AMERICAN VOLUNTEER PROGRAMS FOR ACTION

Constance M. Burns has been named Assistant Director for the Older American Volunteer Programs (OAVP) for ACTION, the federal domestic volunteer agency, by ACTION Director Jane A. Kenny, effective March 12, 1990.

In this position Burns will be responsible for the three OAVP programs administered by the agency, the Retired Senior Volunteer Program, the Foster Grandparent Program, and the Senior Companion Program. The combined budget for the three programs for fiscal year 1990 is $120.5 million and involves the direction of nearly 460,000 volunteers.

Burns comes to ACTION from the Brockton Coalition for the Homeless, Inc., Brockton, MA, where she has been executive director, since 1987. In that position, her duties have included the supervision of a staff of 51 program managers, social workers, and support personnel. During her tenure, she developed a two-year fund-raising campaign and increased volunteer support by 200 percent.

As a result of that initiative, in 1988, she opened a second family shelter, as well as a third shelter, staffed entirely by volunteers, to serve homeless families and individuals.

From 1976 to 1986, Burns served as nutrition project director and assistant to the executive director for the Old Colony Elderly Services, Inc., Brockton, MA. During this period, she developed annual goals and objectives, prepared and monitored budgets, wrote grant applications and provided leadership for over 40 employees, and 200 volunteers. She was also responsible for public relations as well.

Her previous experience also includes being a chemist for Ionics, Inc., Watertown, MA, and a research assistant for Howe Laboratory of Ophthalmology, Boston, MA.

Her credentials include certification as a secondary level teacher in biology and general science, and a license as a social worker. She has a Master of Business Administration degree from Anna Maria College, Paxton, Ma, and a Bachelor of Arts degree in biology from Emmanuel College, Boston, Ma.

In announcing the Burns' appointment, Kenny said, "Constance Burns brings an extensive human service and managerial background to the ACTION Agency. We are fortunate to have someone with her knowledge of issues relating to seniors and voluntarism, serve as the Assistant Director of Older American Volunteer Programs."

Burns and her husband Paul, have four children: Irene Marie, 25; Ted, 24; James, 21; and Michael, 20.

Re: WORLD DEMOCRACY DAY, MAY 1

THE MARCH OF DEMOCRACY has been the hallmark of the most remarkable 12 months in this planet's history. Everywhere tyrants and despots have fallen to rising democratic forces.

Therefore President Bush should declare May 1 to be WORLD DEMOCRACY DAY.

On this day the respective leaders of the world's great democracies would repair to the site of their country's greatest democratic achievement and salute the rising tide of democracy and freedom.

The sites would include Independence Hall, House of Commons, Gdansk shipyard, Gaborone parliament building, Zapote [San Jose CR], Lithuanian parliament building, and special honors to the Althing House in Reykjavik [over 1000 continuous years of democracy] etc.

The televised celebrations would be beamed via satellite by USIA and counterparts into the emerging democracies (e.g. Baltic states, Soviet Georgia) and despotisms (Cuba, Albania) with translations as needed.

The advantages:

- 1) Recapture May Day from rotting Marxism forever.
- 2) Place the President at the head of the worldwide forces of democracy.
- 3) Kindle new hopes in the breasts of those struggling to throw off tyranny.
- 4) Solidify the kinship of the peoples of all democracies.
- 5) Real cheap.

The disadvantages:

- 1) Awakening the usual resentment of any new and valuable idea.
- 2) Displacing two hours of USIA programming and satellite time.
- 3) Air Force 1 fares to Philadelphia.

This is too good an idea not to run with. Please think of some neat way to give me credit for it later on. It's election year up here.

Bertini Receives Leadership Award

Washington D.C.--March 1, 1990--Catherine A. Bertini, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for Food and Consumer Services, today became the first administration official to receive the American Public Welfare Association Leadership in Human Services Award, an honor traditionally reserved for leading governors and members of Congress.

Bertini was honored for her work as Acting Assistant Secretary for the Family Support Administration at the Department of Health and Human Services, a job in which she supervised the initial implementation of the landmark Family Support Act of 1988.

APWA Executive Director A. Sidney Johnson III presented Bertini with the award, "in recognition of her positive contributions to human services and her work on behalf of poor children and their families." He praised Bertini for her leadership in drafting regulations for the 1988 welfare reform law, "in an open, accessible fashion, involving the states and localities, and in a process that was completed on time."

Johnson said Bertini's work "epitomizes the very best in public service." Noting that the state human service commissioners represented by APWA do not always agree with the assistant secretary, he said she is nonetheless "open to ideas, fair-minded, and works hard and masters the complex subjects she is involved in. She has integrity in the very best sense of the word."

In accepting the award before an APWA audience today Bertini recounted a conversation during her college years in New York in which an acquaintance berated her for working "in the system" and not protesting the Vietnam war. "I told him then that I was going to be in a place in the system where I could make a difference," she said, adding that the APWA award is proof of her success.

Bertini praised her former colleagues at the Family Support Administration for their efforts on implementing the 1988 law. She thanked HHS Undersecretary Constance Horner, who attended the award ceremony, for her leadership in securing approval of the Family Support Act regulations within the Bush Administration. She said that President George Bush "sets the tone" for all of the work undertaken in the administration. "It's an honor for me to serve in his administration."

Finally, Bertini said she accepted the award on behalf of "Jane"--who she said represents for her "all those women in the country who we are all able to help by passage of the Family Support Act, and by your implementation of the law.

It is those women and their children who we are all here to serve.

"So on behalf of all the 'Janes' I accept this award," she said.

Bertini served as Acting Assistant HHS Secretary for Family Support from March through October, 1989, when she was named Assistant Secretary of Agriculture with responsibility for all of the food and nutrition programs. She was director of the HHS Office of Family Assistance from 1987 until 1989.

The American Public Welfare Association is a 60-year-old nonprofit bipartisan organization representing the 50 state human service departments, local public welfare agencies, and 5,000 individuals concerned with social welfare policy and practice. The Leadership in Human Services Award is presented each year for outstanding contributions to benefit low-income families and individuals.

Dear Dr. Frazier:

Thank you for your recent letter requesting Administration support for the Consortium for Inter-American Trade and Development.

While we share the Consortium's objective of promoting enhanced trade and development cooperation with Latin America, the proposal raises difficult questions concerning the relationship between the Consortium and existing Federal programs. For this reason, it is not possible to offer Administration support.

MEMORANDUM FOR ANDREW H. CARD

FROM: DAVID Q. BATES

SUBJECT: Response to Thomas W. Frazier

You have asked for guidance in responding to a March 6 letter you received from Thomas Frazier of the Consortium for Inter-American Trade and Development (Tab B). Frazier is seeking "a piece of paper with the President's signature" endorsing the Consortium's activities.

The background material provided by Dr. Frazier indicates that the Consortium was created in December of 1989 "as a special non-profit, off-budget entity for promoting U.S. agricultural development and exports competitiveness and inter-American trade and development cooperation." The Consortium would be self-sustaining, after receiving a one-time Federal appropriation of $500 million.

The Consortium's planned activities and its relationship to existing Federal programs raise serious legal and policy questions. In particular, the plan to use Administration officials to serve on the Consortium's Intergovernmental Advisory Panel is probably unworkable.

White House Counsel concurs.

Recommendation

That you sign the attached letter to Thomas Frazier indicating that the White House cannot be associated with the Consortium's activities.

In case you have not attended one of these affairs, the Gridiron Dinner is white tie and attempts to take a look at current events through musical satire and a lampoon of major public figures from the President down.

President Reagan attended eight Gridiron Dinners, and President Bush followed suit last year, encouraging us to hope that he will be with us once again this year.

Dear Andy;

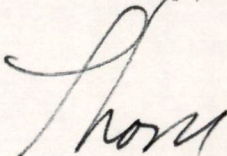

This is a rare occasion that I contact you for advice in your arena. The enclosed letter and resume is to the point, the follow up is that Tony is as fine a person as I've ever met and his corporate experience is exactly what I perceive our Community College system needs. Community colleges must be in concert with industry to fulfill their role in feeding to industry, qualified employees. Tony understands both systems and would be an asset to Governor Martinez' team.

Florida is very exciting with a great pace of growth, but the planning must be done with purpose and implementation supported by small businesses like mine and other grass roots voters.

If you can in any way support Tony Franco's appointment, it will be appreciated.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

April 17, 1990

Dear Dr. Ross:

Thank you for your recent correspondence. How fortunate that your Father was from Massachusetts and knew of my involvement in the Administration.

Obviously, I have forwarded the letter and documentation you provided to the appropriate officials in the Administration for review. As I am not an expert in this area and since this is an issue that would not normally be handled by the White House, I am unable to provide any knowledgeable response to the specific allegations you raise. I am confident, however, that your letter will be given appropriate attention by the Administration.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Andrew H. Card, Jr.
Assistant to the President and Deputy to the Chief of Staff
