Andy,

It was good to see you, however briefly. I really am sorry we couldn't make it to Ron and Lisi's - I miss you and would have liked to catch up. Hard to believe it's been 3 months already. I can't wait 'til June 10th of '92 so I can have a party to celebrate the anniversary of my last going-away party.

I hope to see you soon.

All the best,
Thick

Dear Mr. Card:

We appreciate your appearance last year and your encouraging remarks. We hope you will attend again as our very special guest. Mrs. Bush will be presenting our awards for excellence in education.

Please confirm your attendance at 301-652-3450. We will hand deliver 2 tickets to you. Please join us.

Jose Manuel Casanova

Dear Mr. Costelloe -

Your letter to the editor published in The Berkshire Eagle on August 28, 1991, was sent to me by a friend. The impressive experience you had with the U.S. Supreme Court has given you insight that I found convincing. Thank you for sharing your observation and counsel.

Judge Clarence Thomas begins his hearing before the Senate today. I am confident that we will see "Justice" Thomas on the highest court in the land.

Sincerely, Andy Card

Great justices were conservatives

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

On a recent broadcast of "Inside Government," Peter Arlos' TV show, he was asked what he thought about President Bush's appointment of Clarence Thomas to the U.S. Supreme Court. I was pleased that the question was asked.

The answer transported me back to the 2½ years that I served as a law clerk to Justice Robert Jackson and to the five years I was an assistant to the U.S. attorney general, in whose office much screening of Supreme Court candidates occurred.

I was impressed by Mr. Arlos' knowledge of the court and the people who have served on it. I think he made valid points that ought to be considered during the Thomas confirmation process.

Mr. Arlos criticized those who say that Thomas has very little judicial experience and rightly pointed out that the majority of those who have served on the Supreme Court had no judicial experience before their appointments. As he noted, Justice Louis Brandeis, the great judicial activist, was appointed from a private law practice and Harlan Stone Fiske, Earl Warren and Charles Evans Hughes had no judicial experience.

I was pleased with Mr. Arlos' list of great justices below Holmes and Brandeis, because four of the five were on the Supreme Court when I was clerking and I knew them personally. They were Hugo Black, Felix Frankfurter, Robert Jackson and William O. Douglas. Only Benjamin Cardozo was before my time.

What is interesting about the list of great justices is that some of them, especially Jackson and Frankfurter, were conservatives. Holmes himself, as Mr. Arlos did note, was an exponent of judicial restraint. This shows that no judicial philosophy, no political persuasion and no particular background is necessary for greatness on the Supreme Court.

Bush names key aide to get Gates approved

Card, a Sununu deputy, is selected

By John W. Mashek
GLOBE STAFF

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine — President Bush has designated Andrew H. Card, the deputy White House chief of staff, to direct the administration's campaign to win confirmation of Robert M. Gates as director of the Central Intelligence Agency, administration sources said yesterday.

Card, a former Holbrook resident, four-term member of the Massachusetts Legislature and a Republican gubernatorial candidate in 1982, faces a tough job.

The Senate Intelligence Committee is scheduled to begin hearings on Gates' nomination Sept. 16. Gates, currently the deputy national security adviser, is expected to undergo a grueling examination from senators on his role in the Iran-contra affair. Gates has denied participation in the scandal, in which profits from Iranian arms sales were diverted to support the contra rebels in Nicaragua.

Gates is expected to face strong criticism from Democratic Sens. Bill Bradley of New Jersey, Howard M. Metzenbaum of Ohio and Alan Cranston of California. The White House says it remains confident Gates eventually will win confirmation.

The assignment appears to enhance Card's influence in the White House and on Capitol Hill.

John H. Sununu, the White House chief of staff, has been politically damaged in recent months by the fallout over his wide-ranging use of government transportation.

Since "Air Sununu" stories appeared early this summer, the chief of staff has maintained a low profile around the White House. Some advisers think he will delegate even more authority in the months ahead. Some members of Congress remain angry over his handling of last year's budget agreement.

Bush is known to respect Card, and associates suggest that if Sununu left his post, the president would probably turn to the deputy. Card's brother-in-law, Ronald Kaufman, is a political adviser to Bush as well as Republican national committeeman from Massachusetts.

Card has worked before on Bush's nominations, including the Supreme Court nomination last year of Justice David H. Souter and the pending nomination of Judge Clarence Thomas.

Vive the Academic Resistance

By DOROTHY RABINOWITZ

DURHAM, N.C. — What to expect from a college education?

A good thing you asked because nowadays there is an answer. For the kingly sums spent on tuition, parents now can bank on the fact, so to speak, that their children will emerge fully educated in the principles of politically correct thinking. PC-ism, as it has come to be called, reigns on campuses from sea to shining sea. Dissent from politically correct positions on women, minorities, multiculturalism and the like comes at a high cost—a cost that may include threats, vandalism, sit-ins, shout-downs, charges of racism and sexism and, frequently, administrative punishment.

It does not take much to excite the social consciences of university officials, sensitive to a wide range of offenses against correct thinking. Only a few weeks ago, at a Stanford-Oregon football game, Stanford's marching band satirized Oregon's campaign to save the spotted owl. A Stanford official, perceiving an offense against correct environmental thinking, decreed that the band would be prohibited from performing at the next game, among other penalties. At the University of Texas, the English Department is trying to replace the standard freshman course in English composition with a course in readings on racism and sexism.

Still, irresistible though the tides—to say nothing of the enforcers—of PC may be, it is also beginning to feel the effect of a Resistance movement, evident in the growth of the National Association of Scholars, an organization of academics who want a return to traditional standards in higher education. The Princeton, N.J.-based NAS stands opposed particularly to the new doctrine of multiculturalism which, it charges, denigrates the importance of Western culture. It maintains that politicized faculties have abandoned real education in favor of consciousness raising and a disproportionate emphasis on women's and minority studies.

So it was not surprising that this fall when a scholar decided to begin an NAS chapter at Duke University—a center of exactly the sort of educational values the NAS was formed to oppose—some on the Duke faculty were unhappy. No one, however, seems to have been prepared for the reaction of Prof. Stanley Fish. Mr. Fish is chairman of Duke's English Department, nationally renowned as the bastion of anti-traditional values. It is a place where literary works are deemed important mainly insofar as they can be said to explain social conditions and where faculty members immerse themselves in earnest scholarship on the novels of Zane Grey, Louis L'Amour and Mario Puzo.

Alerted to the imminent formation of an NAS chapter, Chairman Fish fired off a letter to the provost, advising him that faculty belonging to the NAS should not be appointed to key committees involving tenure or curriculum decisions. He would subsequently charge the organization with being pro-American or pro-Western are now treated on the campuses as though they were some sort of subversive evil."

As significant as the storm itself, perhaps, was the identity and political sympathies of the Duke scholar who had started it all with his decision to form an NAS chapter. That scholar is James David Barber, political science professor, civil rights activist, past president of Amnesty International, eminent author of "The Presidential Character" and a leader in the successful struggle to keep the Nixon library from being established at Duke. (The papers would have been fine, Prof. Barber notes. "I just didn't want the shrine here.")

Forty-six members of the Duke faculty joined Mr. Barber in signing their names

"Students' minds are supposed to be trained, not converted politically," says Duke Prof. Barber.

"racist, sexist and homophobic."

By all accounts, including those of Duke faculty sympathetic to Mr. Fish, asking the administration to violate the right of free speech and association and other basic tenets of academic freedom was a mistake—politically as well as otherwise. Mr. Fish had dispatched copies of his letter to four or five trusted colleagues, one of whom was sufficiently taken aback by its contents to see that it was made public. Thus began a controversy that would embarrass Mr. Fish and Duke administrators, who quickly refused the letter's request.

It would also be something of an education for Duke students, particularly those who run "The Chronicle," the undergraduate newspaper that broke the story. Once the uproar began, Prof. Fish denied ever saying that NAS members should be excluded from tenure and curriculum committees. "It was really strange to hear him say that," a student editor marveled. "We had the letter with his own words asking just that, right in front of us." Prof. Fish has declared himself unavailable for comment on the matter.

News of the Duke contretemps has stirred wide reaction among academics nationwide. English Prof. Felicia Bonaparte of the City University of New York (not an NAS member) says that this effort to smear a perfectly respectable organization of scholars is reminiscent of the 1950s. "At that time they had the House Un-American Activities Committee," she says. "Today they have something they should call the House American Activities Committee because people and ideas that are to an ad inviting colleagues who valued an "open intellectual life" to join the NAS, which has 1,400 members and 25 chapters nationwide. "Its aims," Prof. Barber declares, "address exactly what concerns me, which is that what's going on in universities now threatens everything that a university is supposed to be about. It is about scholarship. Students' minds are supposed to be trained, not converted politically."

Bob Wilson, education columnist of the Durham Morning Herald and once an administrator at Duke, echoes this view. "What's happened to Duke," he says, is "the remaking of a mainstream university into a radical one—with terrible consequences—and I speak as a map who campaigned for George McGovern."

Many faculty members here and in other universities, he says, aren't interested in teaching. "Their real ambition is to empower the oppressed. And what they offer is cotton candy for the mind." As an example, he pulls out an English Department listing of the scholarly writings of one professor and reads that her works focus on the "daily life social practices and include articles on children's toys, aerobic classes and supermarkets."

Duke, he says, has set itself the task of finding one black to put in each department. "But they have gone to great lengths to avoid calling it a quota."

The plan infuriates no one more than Prof. Kenny Williams, a black professor of English at Duke, long-time member of the NAS and a fervent opponent of what she calls "the cult of relevancy." She is not interested, she says, in doing social work or teaching oppression. "With all due respect to Alice Walker—and I know people get goose bumps about her—I just don't. I want to teach literature that has stood the test of time. So much of what students get in college now they can get from Time and Newsweek."

To her, she says, teaching English means educating students in literature, history and civilization. It also includes teaching them to write. She has had a history of conflict with the English Department over her insistence on giving low grades to students who write poorly. One letter from the acting English Department chairman charges her with paying too much attention to a student's spelling and grammatical errors and too little to the student's ideas. In her reply, Prof. Williams wrote back, "I was surprised to read that you can separate a student's ideas from excessive grammatical and spelling errors. I find, as should most students, that these are deterrents to ideas."

Of Duke's plan to hire one black per department she says icily: "This is garbage. If they really wanted black faculty, they are out there and they could be invited to present their credentials along with everyone else. But no, they have to go around shopping for blacks, buying them."

Any black who comes in that way is crazy—because it is a stigma. The assumption is, you weren't really qualified." Prof. Williams says she felt compelled to tell the administrator who questioned her grading standards that she had won her Ph.D. through work, and not by "street corner groups singing 'We Shall Overcome.'"

She joined the NAS shortly after its founding in the late '80s. Prof. Williams says, because scholars needed an organization to uphold standards. In recent weeks, 14 more Duke scholars have joined the NAS. Political correctness—with all its consequences to intellectual life—is of course alive and well at Duke University as elsewhere, and not likely to go away soon. But neither, from the looks of things, is the Resistance it has spawned.

July 15, 1991

Mr. Andrew Card
Special Assistant to the President
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Andy,

It certainly has been a while since the 1988 Bush campaign. I trust that the White House is continuing to treat you right.

I wanted to drop you a line because I have recently completed my redistricting duties in Iowa and am beginning my search for a 1992 campaign.

Having dedicated my career to electing Republicans to public office, I aspire to manage a Congressional challenger race of national significance in 1992. Moreover, I am very interested in gaining campaign experience in the Northeastern United States. As an influential Republican official, you may be aware of a campaign that is looking.

As you may recall, I now have campaign experience at the Congressional, Senatorial, and Presidential levels. But I feel that in this election cycle, it is vital that Republicans seize the opportunities created by redistricting to defeat incumbent Democrats and capture open seats.

As campaign manager, I will bring political knowledge, management skills, campaign experience and a commitment to excellence to the campaign. In this election cycle, I want to build on my solid, grassroots organization background, while adding to my experience with polling and paid media.

I am willing to relocate, but would prefer to work in a state with a major Presidential primary or caucus. Currently, I am consulting the Republican Party of Iowa, but would like to be back on the campaign trail by Labor Day.

Enclosed is my resume and references. If you are aware of a Congressional campaign in search of a manager, please feel free to forward my resume. Thanks.

Respectfully,

Mike Connell

The Honorable Andrew H. Card, Jr.
Assistant to the President
Deputy to the Chief of Staff

Dear Mr. Card,

I am writing to you again because you were very kind to respond to my initial inquiry about working for you in the White House. I am a recent graduate of The Catholic University of America, and presently looking for a position on the White House Staff or elsewhere. I believe my Republican credentials, specifically work for both then Vice President Bush and Vice President Quayle, should qualify me for a junior staff position. I realize that you are very busy and sincerely appreciate your taking the time to read this letter in hopes you are aware of an opening.

I spent this summer preparing for, then traveling to the Orient. The trip was a graduation present from my parents, one of whom works for Northwest Airlines which made the trip affordable. While traveling abroad I realized what a true blessing it is to be from the United States and observed the worldwide respect for our President.

My interest in serving the Bush Administration certainly has not dwindled since my graduation. I would truly appreciate any consideration for a position on the White House Staff or in another political position. I can be reached anytime at the above address, so please feel free to contact me anytime. I apologize for taking time from your busy schedule. I hope to be working again, soon, in the Bush Administration in a junior staff capacity. Thank you again for your consideration.

Sincerely,

John P. Crowley III

Dear Mr. Card:

As a result of the remarkable events in the USSR last week, the Ukrainian/Chernobyl project I discussed with you is on even stronger grounds.

Our delegation is leaving on September 5 and will return on September 21. Our host, Goscomchernobyl, has arranged visits to the Chernobyl reactor #4, as well as to several of the contaminated areas in the Ukraine. We will also meet with other Ukrainian organizations and with several UKSSR officials. We have contacted the US Consulate in Kiev and will meet with officials there during our visit.

We would appreciate the opportunity to discuss this project in more detail with you and to brief the appropriate White House officials prior to our departure. Also, given the events of last week, we would appreciate your advice on any other federal officials we should brief before we leave.

Thanks.

Sincerely,

EQ

Dear Andy,

Candy and I extend our hope you and your Family are all well and enjoying life in Washington. We often see you on the nightly news and remember the "good old days" in Holbrook. We were sorry you were unable to attend the 25th reunion last November. We went with the McNeelys and ~~met~~ people we hadn't seen since "65" and Tommy Ahearn wasn't there!

Candy is now "retired" from public teaching and runs a small antiques business in Sandwich where we live. I continue psychiatric social work at the V.A. Medical Center in Brockton - "20 years" and part time Faculty with the Boston College graduate school of social work. I may attempt private practice on the Cape in the near future - the commute is "getting to me." we have one daughter - Katie - who is going into the 7th grade. She is an excellent student and active in all sports. we all love living "year round" on Cape Cod and take full advantage of the ocean and natural beauty which surrounds us.

My other purpose for writing is at the request of a former co-worker at the V.A. whose son is applying for various Federal law positions. I write with great hesitancy not knowing if this is appropriate. The young man, Lawrence McCarthy, and his father resides in Braintree - you once represented them in the State House. The father, Joe, approached me and I indicated I had reservations about forwarding the resume to you.

He appears to be an outstanding young man who recently lost his position with the Attorney General's office due to budget cuts.

IF this procedure is not appropriate, please disregard the enclosed materials. IF he can be assisted in his employment search, the family is asking for consideration.

Lastly, our invitation to visit us on the Cape still stands. It would be great to see Kathy and yourself if you are "in the area". Candy remembers teaching your daughters in Holbrook kindergarten and extends her best wishes to all! Our tel. # is (508) 888-7369 when you return to the Cape. We hope to see you soon. Sincerely,
Dany Clark

Focus on Politics

POLITICAL JOURNAL

An authoritative voice for victims

In what could be seen as poetic justice, Donna Fournier Cuomo, whose brother was murdered by Willie Horton in 1974, was appointed Wednesday by Gov. Weld to the Criminal History System Board for a three-year term. Cuomo, the director of a victims-services agency named for her brother Joey, is the first and only victims' advocate to sit on the nine-member board, which was created in a reform of the Criminal Offenders Records Information, or CORI, law.

It was the notorious case of Horton raping a Maryland woman and stabbing her husband while Horton was on furlough for the murder of Joey Fournier that dogged Michael Dukakis' presidential bid in 1988, and ultimately led to legislation reforming CORI, which Dukakis signed in December as one of his last official gubernatorial acts. The new law provides greater public access to criminal records; the board is designed to balance the public's need to know about a felon's past with privacy rights, something on which Cuomo speaks with authority.

Dear Andy,

Thank you for taking the time to so thoroughly address the concerns raised in my letter about Social Security's budget.

I very much appreciate the favorable treatment that Social Security received in the President's 1992 budget. If the agency receives the full increase represented in the budget package, it will go a long way toward improving Social Security Administration's operations and service to the public. And from what I understand, it appears likely that the supplemental funding for Zebbley will become a reality.

I was pleased to hear you say that Gwen King and Secretary Sullivan are great advocates for the agency. I agree. I also believe that this administration is committed to a healthy and effective Social Security Administration.

Yet the fear still exists that the appropriations process will reduce the agency's 1992 budget as it did in FY'91 and Social Security Administration will not receive the actual budget amount called for by the President. As long as Social Security's operating expenses are included in the domestic discretionary spending cap, this is a very real fear. I certainly understand the point that you make about the possibility of other agencies such as HCFA and Transportation fighting for "off-budget" status should this status be granted to Social Security Administration. None of us wants to increase the deficit! Yet, I believe Social Security is different than other agencies in that it is running such a large surplus and in the fact that most of the operating expenses come out of the Social Security trust funds - not general revenue.

I won't take any more of your time with this issue. I appreciate your referral to Tom Scully and may be contacting him for further discussion.

I have taken the liberty of sharing your letter with some of the members of our organization. I hope you don't mind. I did cover over your note about Tabettha's wedding so you won't have crowds of uninvited guests! (Can you believe that we're old enough to be planning our children's weddings?!)

I read in the Globe about the possibility of a White House job for Ron. Please give him my best wishes and hopes that it will come to pass.

I was going to invite you and Kathy to attend our New England Social Security Management Association annual weekend (5/17-5/19) in Ogunquit, Maine, but I would imagine that the weekend before Tabettha's wedding would be pretty busy for you. If you do feel like getting away, though, just give me a call and I'll book you in. (401)-822-1409). We'd love to have you say a few words at our Saturday night banquet!

Please say "hi" to everyone there for me. I will be in Baltimore and D.C. from 3/18 - 3/24 on business, but the schedule is pretty full so I doubt I'll get out to see everyone. David and I will just have to plan a trip down there soon!

Thanks again for your response.

David is the manager of the Newport Social Security office. He's taking his wife and two children to D.C. for the first time 4/28-4/30 and wanted to tour the White House. When he called for tickets, he was told that no tours are being conducted. He asked me to check with you for an update of that situation. Dear Andy:

Ben Marsh, currently serving as a member of the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission, desires to serve the President as an Ambassador, preferably to the country of New Zealand.

He knows the President personally and has been entertained with his wife at the summer White House in Kennebunkport, Maine. A Bush supporter for many years, he was the Ohio Chairman in 1988.

In the brief time that I have known him I have been impressed with his ability and am sure that he would serve the President and the country well.

Ben will make his request through the appropriate channels but I wanted to let you know and through you to let Governor Sununu know that this is an outstanding candidate.

Do you have any suggestions as to the best way for him to proceed?

Many thanks for your help. Betsy and I saw you on TV the other night when you were with the President on his trip to California. What a tremendous experience you are having!

With kind regards,

Dear Frank:

I enclose a short resume - in accordance with our conversation.

As you know I have been strongly supportive of George Bush for many years - and well before 1980.

Further, although I have been in the practice of law in northwest Ohio (Toledo) for most of my career, I have received international assignments from time to time in Washington and overseas.

I have a strong desire to serve President Bush as an Ambassador. Certainly I would serve in a professional manner.

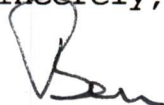

My preference, if possible, would be to be posted to New Zealand. My simple explanation is that not only is it an important and beautiful country (which we have visited), but my brother-in-law (a retired U.S. Coast Guard officer) and his New Zealand wife live in Kerikeri.

I would appreciate your recommendations and assistance. If I have not heard from you, I'll call next week.

This week is our daughter's wedding - so all else fades into insignificance!

Thanks.

Sincerely,

Benjamin F. Marsh

Thank you for your continued help and assistance. I appreciate your special attention to this matter. Enclosed is the letter for Governor Sununu that you and Judy discussed. I have also sent a copy to David Carney and George Khoury. President Curry is on our finance committee. He has given us his full support, and told the committee that he will actively help with this event. He is a most gracious and wonderful individual, and we are fortunate to have his precious time and involvement. I have included a recent note from him.

I have been working very hard. We are waiting to hear from Foundations to which we have submitted proposals. Also, we were recognized by the Massachusetts House of Representatives for our work in violence prevention, at which our favorite Lieutenant Governor, Paul, was the guest speaker. It hasn't been officially announced yet, but I have been appointed to The Criminal History Board by Governor Weld. I am very happy about this, and I know I will be able to make a very positive contribution to the Board.

Andy, I look forward to seeing you again, soon. If you need anything further, please call me, as Judy will be away on vacation until June 29, 1991. I will call George and President Curry as soon as I hear from you, and put the process in motion. Thank you for your help, and God Bless.

I appreciate hearing from you and will make sure that your letter is made a part of the record in the Office of Presidential Personnel.

Again, thank you for your interest in writing.

Sincerely,

Andrew H. Card, Jr.
Assistant to the President
and Deputy Chief of Staff

Dear Andy,

Enclosed is a copy of a letter to Ron. He called me a couple of months ago and offered his support. Since then I've been in touch with various Personnel people. As Seitz is leaving EUR in State and Catto is coming in to USIA, positions could crop up in these areas. When I met Jane Leonard at USIA, she also mentioned having worked with you and Ron during the Campaign. I tried several times to call Clark Wurzberger in DOD Liaison, but my calls were not returned.

With education becoming more prominent as an issue, you may have heard about the wave of "Political Correctness" taking over academia. My old alma mater Stanford has acquired a leadership reputation in this area. So one day I felt inspired to dispense a few words on the subject. As a result an essay evolved on my word processor. I'm having some copies printed up, and I'll send you one.

Our medical software business keeps growing - new contracts, new markets. So we are not joining the alleged recession. In a couple of days we leave for Texas to attend the Texas Medical Association convention which will promote CMS's Medicare software. Everywhere we've been struck by how much physicians feel that they're in a tightening squeeze between legal and regulatory liabilities - and they're plenty unhappy about it. Yesterday the Post had a front page article about a Harvard study on health care paperwork costs. Sandy thought the article was absurd - just another disguised promotion for socialized medicine as in Canada.

Polls I've heard about indicate that following alleged transgressions, Barney Frank and Sen. Ted are more popular than ever among constituents. It's interesting how Dems on the Hill can get away with misdeeds of moral "substance," while liberals attempt to discredit GOP Presidents and Staff (eg. the Governor's jet trips, Kitty Kelly, Iran-Contra, Woodward, etc.) with alleged "procedural" breaches that, in reality, the grass-roots majority couldn't care less about. Since they can't win national office via substantive issues, liberals keep deluding themselves that they can do it via these "procedural" artificial non-scandals.

Speaking of Sen. Ted . . . in case you haven't heard the following (with apologies to Howie Carr):

Q: What do Ted Kennedy and the Luckiest Man Alive in Iraq have in common?

A: They both know what it's like to cross a bridge while being bombed.

best regards,
Paul

backing on the job front

Dear Ron,

Thanks for your note in March and for going to bat for me.

I appreciate your encouragement to "get out there and network." I guess it's a process like panning for gold or scouring the land for diamonds. You can get lucky and strike it rich almost immediately, or spend forever and come up empty. In my case, between the Inauguration and April last year (before we started 6 months of business travel), I spent literally many hundreds of hours talking with Campaign friends and carefully drafting revision after revision of letters to VIP'S, Liaison and Personnel staff, and accompanying submissions (resumes, etc.).

More recently: I've contacted Catherine Keller of DOS Liaison, tried several times to call Clark Wurzberger at DOD, and had a very pleasant visit with Jane Leonard at USIA. I asked Catherine to keep me in mind especially for possible openings at EUR, where there may be some turn-over because Raymond Seitz is going (or has gone) to London. Jane said USIA had no current openings, but the fact that Catto is coming in there may lead to possibilities.

As well, I contacted Treasury Liaison and asked them to keep me on their active consideration list.

I also talked with Loren Thompson, who said that positions in the "natural resources" agencies require specialized backgrounds, with mine being rather more suitable for foreign-policy related posts.

Also I would like to be considered for suitable White House service, but I am puzzled as to how to go about seeking consideration. Is this something Personnel takes care of, does it occur only by inside word-of-mouth, or do I simply send my resume around to the different WH bureaus such as National Security?

Having spent many years of background preparation for the possibility, I remain very patient concerning Administration service. Independently involved with our medical software business as well as studies and writing, I am well occupied until something suitable should open. And, as I've said elsewhere, it wouldn't make sense otherwise just to put me in a token position where one couldn't get the most of what I have to offer.

Congratulations on your new appointment, I'll bet you're glad to be moving on; and thanks again for your active support.

DIVERSITY, PURPOSE AND CORRECTISM AT STANFORD
Reminiscences and Reflections from Washington

Paul Corley, April 1991

I. Becoming A Stranger In A Strange Land

While thumbing through some recent Stanford alumni magazines, letters lambasting Stanford's new policies accommodating multicultural diversity caught my attention. One alumna was "dismayed" and "shocked" by the "controversial" changes in curriculum, another "offended" and "appalled" by Stanford's new "domestic housing" policy that accords "committed gay, lesbian, and heterosexual couples" rights equal to married couples. But in "chiding a panel of Stanford administrators for its lack of sensitivity to students coming from different cultures," one student was quoted, "If I wanted to come from where I live in Africa and apply for housing with my three wives, there would be an uproar."

One wonders who can be satisfied. According to the Stanford Observer, Stanford's Board of Trustees concluded that the domestic partners policy must stand because it "is in line with the pre-existing and quite long-standing policy of non-discrimination that the University has had." But just how far does this policy reach? Whom does it and will it eventually affect?

As part of the Stanford community for many years, I experienced its transformation from halcyon days of detached inquiry and tempered dialogue to an era of ideological froth, name-calling and confrontation. Yet when I finally moved away in the mid-Seventies, my imagination could not have fancied the turmoils and extravaganzas to come.

Recently visiting my old alma mater, I cautiously parked our camper van in the inner campus, already a risky act. In looking around as I proceeded towards the Bookstore, doubt began to overcome me that I was in fact back in the Stanford I once knew. The first apprehension crept up as I noticed that one of the old residences was now prominently labeled "Gender Studies House." I began to fear that perhaps my van was occupying a spot designated for a person of Gender/Color, perhaps just my first transgression in the New Era on Campus. Was I, the prototypical atavistic Euro-Whitemale, guilty of Incorrect Parking, i.e. of Parkism?

Further unsureness about personal relevance and propriety quickly followed as I scanned kiosk signs publicizing socially activist awareness movements, none implying warm goodwill towards my cultural cast. Nor did Bookstore browsing especially reassure. There one volume after the next presented some new form of political and social consciousness Correctitude that did not bode well for the likes of me.

Soon I began to feel like an alien stranger in a strange land. Now I began to really worry. Perhaps some New Age campus psychics were about. Perhaps they would be able to divine all the false Isms furtively lurking in my Republican stream of consciousness. Perhaps they would get the Campus Thought Police to haul me away on suspicion of being Ideologically Offensive. Worse still, they might search and seize my van to discover ideological contraband: some Wall Street Journals, a journal of random thoughts (very incriminating), and a box containing Baroque music tapes, which would clearly show my reactionary Western cultural bias - a lack of Musical Correctness and Multicultural Sensitivity. I began to look and feel guilty and paranoid. Was I being observed? Followed? Anxiety laden, I decided to get away while I had the chance.

First memories of Stanford recall little, if any campus interest in political activism. If anything politics was probably thought of as just another bourgeois activity that interested parents, something to go along with making money, golf and dining out - not quite worthy of higher forms of academic being and contemplation. At most, active political concerns focused on the alleged threats McCarthyism and Loyalty Oaths posed to cherished traditions of academic freedom descending from the Medieval University and the Greek Academy.

One otherwise sought to understand the logic of politics and the political, to interpret the actual in terms of the potential and the ideal as envisioned from a variety of theoretical perspectives, from China to India, Plato to Machiavelli, Rousseau to Burke, Marx to Freud. Sheltered from social pressures and discord, ideas could flower, their radiance inspire. But already in the horizon tempests of civil and ideological strife gathered. Not even the calm havens of academic reflection could this time buttress against their rage.

With Vietnam, JFK's assassination, Civil Rights activism, Goldwater, LBJ and the Great Society, the first storm fronts thrashed the calm. Someone recognized that a climate of bigotry and hate pervaded the land and spread the alarm. Ivory Tower haughtiness towards the External World, especially towards The Establishment, its country club and Big Business types avariciously manipulating the Innocent, evolved into contempt, at times a hatred otherwise supposedly infecting the non-campus mainstream. America especially became accountable for world suffering. Somebody had to be guilty. As usual, it had to be the rich, successful and powerful. Personal and social accountability acquired new meaning. The Era of No Fault, rights without responsibilities, had arrived.

Meanwhile I let down my political theory professor and advisor. Major studies in political and social thought failed to dislodge me from antediluvian core beliefs. Republicanism was too ingrained. I continued to misunderstand the role of the university as the guardian of reasoned dialogue. Elections loomed, and the campus now deemed them worthy of attention. Not convinced by the promises of social architecture and the Great Society, I opted for the wrong side, The Establishment. Probably worst of all, I made the mistake of publishing my opinions. I was unprepared for the reactions.

Professors and students suggested that pro-GOP letters and articles in the Stanford Daily indicated I was skirting on the edge of "fascism." After all, wouldn't Goldwater drop The Bomb on someone if he had the chance? That did seem fairly self-evident to Bill Moyers and the rationally enlightened. Moreover, a puzzling selective human rights focus urged me to write that beyond South Africa others suffered, as in East Berlin, where Communist police shot people fleeing over the Wall, where the spectre of Communist tyranny had once indelibly impressed itself on one young mind. But that didn't go over well either. Concerning my political heresies one professor told me, "If I had known how you would turn out, I never would have admitted you to my Western Civ seminar."

Afterwards I persuaded myself that silence was definitely the best policy: philosophy, graduate school and getting the Ph.D. first, opening mouth on politics later, when presumably one couldn't retroactively cancel the degree.

Dramatic campus cultural advancements next occurred with the ending of late leave requirements for women, and the eventual, if not shocking institution of co-ed dorms, no doubt implemented for the civilizing influence it would have. As the campus became politically if not intellectually more agitated, at least it might remain congenial.

Later on I returned from extended European studies to be greeted by the Seventies and mutations in campus dialect. Someone had to explain to me what "bummer" meant. A young lady told me I was a "male chauvinist pig." That required explaining too. When B-52's raided Cambodia, anonymous punks trashed the computer center and broke windows in the Hoover Institute, presumably as an advanced form of campus protest dialogue. People began to separate off into the straight and the scruffy. White Plaza served as a forum for the stereotypical four-letter rantings, contrived no doubt for consciousness-raising shock value, of various self-inflated anti-Establishment proto-Gender/Color personalities. Free Speech acquired new configurations. Protest grew into a mindset, fashion and lifestyle; dialogue became diatribe.

II. Back Home in Politically Correct Washington

Name-calling and political wind-bagging are of course well practiced Washington arts. But much of this is procedural and pro forma. After a day of wrangling and pontificating on high moral grounds contestants call it a day to slake their parched throats in good fellowship at established watering troughs. Not unlike Ralph the Sheepdog and Sam the Wolf in the Warner Brothers cartoons: when the Five PM siren blows, after a day of punch outs and pitfalls over the welfare of sheep, they check out at the time clock and trundle off together into the sunset. "Nice day, Ralph." "Good to be alive, Sam."

But as with all progress, yesterday's advances seem but a foretaste of things to come. So, with lead articles in some of our favorite periodicals, we are coming to learn about the cutting edge in academia. And Washington is beginning to realize that it's but a piker when compared to American campuses. There the contestants never quit and call it a day. They're serious. There they've raised social babel, political condemnation and conceptual ghettoizing to the level of a truly high art. There the days are neither very nice, nor does it often seem especially good to be alive.

With a deeper twist, Stanford and other campuses are besting Washington in the area of free speech limitations. Because of politics, in Washington procedure and style seem frequently to supersede substance, appearance and perception are vital. Insensitive slips of the tongue may offend, create political liabilities, cost votes. Judicial competence, for example, now depends on one's "social sensitivity." Speech must be guarded and carefully posed. Affronting some group's alleged sensibilities can get a person into big trouble quickly. It's not so much what you think, or even that you think, that counts, but how you say it.

Maybe because Washington's intelligentsia sees its own circumstances mirrored by the scene at Stanford and elsewhere, it has begun to take increasing notice, sometimes with alarm. Threaten the National Weal, Washington will get involved. After all, isn't speech a Civil Rights issue? Being politic has always been important, but since when must it become idiocy?

Along with all else, Washington is concerned about both education and wars. Not only must we fight the drug war, we also find ourselves in a culture war over education. At Stanford and other campuses this war continues to stir up ever more suspicion, discrimination, alienation and hostility, while accusations repeatedly trade fire over whose cultural norms and sensitivities should control the territories of academic inquiry and campus behavior. Higher education is on the line here.

Meanwhile, one questions whether much teaching and learning still go on, or can long continue as we alumni once knew. But perhaps that's the point: teaching and learning were all part of a plot, a "conspiracy" if you will, by dominant white European males, mostly dead, to exploit people of Gender and Color, not to mention the Third World and Mother Earth herself (this latter being a specialized form of chauvinistic eco-sexism). Teachers must be Sensitized, learning "Corrected."

Maybe the majority of those demanding mainstream-level legitimacy for their alternative visions, lifestyles and multi-cultural attitudes sincerely believe their causes are Correct. Aren't they just trying to remedy social and racial injustices which the rest of society keeps ignoring? But how does such idealism turn into intolerant militancy? History may offer some clues.

III. Ideology Corrects History

Dubbed as "Political Correctness" or "PCism," the new campus thought aggression frequently exposes itself to be a radical, doctrinaire egalitarianism. Its dogmas extensively root themselves in the classically ideological worldview that history and culture are but the products of class and race conflict, domination and exploitation, thus that the existing "Eurocentric" culture must be replaced and history revised, i.e. "Corrected," - or, as recently intoned at Stanford in Correctness Chant: "Heh, Heh, Ho, Ho, Western Civ has got to go!"

Perhaps, though, the term "Politically Correct" should be reserved for Washington, where being politically correct is not so often a matter of belief and substance as one of expediency and perception, and essential for survival and advancement. For academic climes, the phrase "Ideologically Correct" or "ICism" might well be more suitable.

First, the tenets for Correct Thinking typically descend directly from classical 18th and 19th century Ideology, such as Marxism and the sociology of knowledge. One notes that "ideology," a specific term of art in the history of thought, connotes both a deliberately conceived activist political worldview as well as principles of historical criticism having the purpose to unmask the exploitative class-based origins of social institutions. In sum, it has provided a technology of ideas and political power for charismatic progressive elites to rally the socially discontented Have Nots against the Haves, expropriate the latter to purportedly benefit the former, and thereby transfer power and profit to themselves. Indeed, this is precisely the paradigm implemented by many self-appointed "civil rights" leaders, whose livelihood depends on a continuing condition of Victimhood, real or imagined.

With the French Revolution Ideology crashed into History and Western consciousness when its ferocity laid waste to the ancienne regime. Later on, as Bolshevism and Maoism, Ideology devastated much of the globe, killing tens of millions in its effort to overthrow the past and create a New Society and Personkind. Contemporary Ideology has now evolved into new forms, including Campus Correctism. Sweep away traditional grass-roots values and family structures, the pluralistic cultural infrastructures, then the way is cleared to superimpose technologies of ideological manipulation and regulation.

Secondly, Campus Cause Correctness is, like a religion, a committed belief system, often incorporating religious-like structures and elements. These may include prophecies and apocalyptic visions, utopian beliefs and transcendent origins, moral absolutisms, authority, hierarchy and censorship, special leaders, ministers and martyrs, congregations of devoted and committed followers, revelatory literature, codes of speech, conduct and dress, taboos, separatism, ceremonies, special shrines, consciousness-raising meetings, enhanced emotional states, redemption, and, perhaps most importantly, fund-raising and donations.

For these reasons, the term "Correctism" (the capital "C" denoting its belief-system basis) seems appropriate to designate Ideological Correctness, or, as it has come to be called, "PCism," as encountered at Stanford and on other campuses.

But by whatever Ism one calls it, the consequences of not being Correct vary from place to place. In America, it usually only amounts to social censorship (in Washington, loss of power status). Elsewhere, failure to be Correct can and does have consequences far more severe. And curiously, whereas the worst criminals can be rehabilitated, and even furloughed, those with ideologically Incorrect pasts cannot. They must pay the price and remain ever stigmatized.

With rhetorical intimidation and targeted epithets Ideological Correctism targets its revisionistic criticism at history and tradition, often via the pseudo-hermeneutic known as "Critical Studies" or "Critical Theory." Its revolutionary agenda would rebuild society by totally politicizing every aspect of life while defining new concepts of power and behavior validity. Those with power in society by definition have caused all social ills, while those with little or no power, typically women, minorities and the homeless, can't possibly be responsible for their situations or actions, no matter what they are. Following a type of Orwellian Newspeak logic, "root causes" have victimized the criminals, often the victims are the real "root cause" criminals.

Yet this is not the only logical novelty Correctism employs. In asserting the relative character of all cultural values and attitudes, Correctism as a value and attitude system must itself be relative, hence no more "correct" than any other belief system. Is Correctism in reality anything more than a bundle of solipsistic illusions propped up by an abyss? - in Bentham's phrase, "nonsense on stilts?"

But Ideological Correctism declares itself in exclusive possession of the Keys to the Temple of Wisdom (or Doom?), though the claim lies not so much in the strength of its reasoning as in the magnitude of its assertion. It would stand outside historical causation and arrogate to itself the absolutism of trans-historical insight.

So Correctism takes logic a further innovative step to embody a characteristic paradox. On the one hand the material forces of history, the class struggle, preestablish how people necessarily think about reality. On the other hand, Correctism's elite visionaries somehow avoid this deterministic grip. They sit, so to speak, on an Archimedean self-leveraging point outside of historical conditioning. They alone possess the culturally unbiased purity if not quasi-mystical insight to behold utopian ordinances essential for instituting the Millennium.

Without humor, life is but a shell, and irony its potential master. But the True Believers abide immersed in the clarified sensitivity of their feelings and emotions, often to appear less insightful than merely unsatisfied and confused, as though Utopia simply can't or won't overtake their impoverished realities. Failing to gain or perhaps unable to hope for success and happiness, they hold with self-deception and name-calling others answerable for their plight. History has clearly been unkind to them, so it must be Corrected

IV. Correctism Corrects Culture and Campus

Stanford's motto is, or used to be, "Die Luft der Freiheit weht" (the winds of freedom blow). Such breezes once wafted over Stanford and other American campuses. Independence of thought and expression without fear of reprisal kept the academic air buoyantly fresh and free.

Today, if at all, these winds blow elsewhere. Instead a stifling ideological pollution permeates campus environments. Like an alien force struggling for control through internal invasion and takeover, Correctism attacks society and culture with a root and branch "de-construction" of the host society's values. In Washington, along with Dartmouth and Duke, Stanford in particular has acquired notoriety as a Castle (or, perhaps, Dungeon) of Correctism. Given recent scandals alleging misuse of Federal funds, one cynic observed that now Stanford is both Correct and Corrupt.

In preferring epithets over substantive discussion, contentious Correctists strive to discredit and punish those who oppose the Correct positions on and solutions for social issues. Opponents who assert that affirmative action programs are race-based quota systems are "racists" pure and simple - no need to debate the merits. Christians and Jews who oppose homosexuality and sodomy on scriptural and family-value grounds are "homophobic," only the Correct attitude is allowed. Those who believe in sustaining conservation through free market resources and cooperation rather than replacing corporations with socialism are nothing but greedy corporate polluter-exploiters. Designated offenders on campus must attend sensitivity sessions, be publicly censured, apologize, or face expulsion. Conservative speakers may not come on campus to lecture or debate. Stanford will gladly take money from conservative alumni and from Washington, as to embellish its own president's house with a $1,000-plus Italian fruitwood commode (Washington applauds this rival to the notorious $600 Air Force toilet seat). But it won't accept a library for the papers of a U.S. President if, like Ronald Reagan, that President happens to be, in the opinion of Correctist militants (if not Kitty Kelly), a "racist reactionary."

Instead of cultivating self-confidence and discipline in thought and demeanor, skills crucial to social well-being, Correctism encourages personal and intellectual dependency. Rather than employing reason and substantive argument Correctism attacks and reacts with specialized personal labels hurled on the character of its opponents. Thinking for oneself, especially when challenging Correctism's doctrines, may unwittingly summon vituperative rhetoric accusing the skeptic of various ideological sins: eg, "homophobic," "racist," "sexist," "fascist," "imperialistic," "insensitive," etc. Inquiry and dialogue, once the heart of university teaching and learning, can seldom utter a breath or breathe easily when Correctism chokes the atmosphere.

In putting all aspects of campus life into a political yoke, from the classroom to personal intimacies, Correctism bores into young minds to have them eventually spread its dogmas throughout society via various social cause and public advocacy fronts. Hence unbelievers think that Ideological Correctism is a form of brainwashing having nothing to do with the purpose of a university.

Open ended diversity of thought has long been an integral aspect of university life in the evolution of the modern era. But Correctism proclaims a false diversity, "Multiculturalism," to use as a political tool to deconstruct, i.e. dismantle Western history and values for the purpose of advancing its ideological agenda. It imposes group favoritism and preaches group stereotypes, ironically fostering contempt and prejudice in the paradox of purportedly ending racism by transferring it.

Correctism's demands for Multicultural rights comprise a key strategic component of its agenda. Confronting traditional values and standards of the American cultural consensus, it captures publicity, polarizes groups and emotions, and inflames resentment, while holding in particular America responsible for a litany of historical and global crimes.

But how far does the Multicultural rights agenda reach? For example, can any student with three wives have them housed at Stanford, or must one have been born into a Third World culture? Shouldn't this possibility be available to all under egalitarian assumptions concerning universal accessibility?

And shouldn't the Correct-Thinking Community accept, validate and support, indeed even adopt "alternative" lifestyle practices however these may offend, even horrify mainstream American sensibilities? To some, devaluing the status of marriage to the level of homosexual domestic partnerships while equally supporting the latter is already bad enough.

But why stop there? Doesn't Correctism's doctrine of Multicultural freedom based on moral relativism oblige Stanford, not to mention society, to tolerate virtually any culturally established practice, whatever and from wherever? Must not the Correct Community acknowledge such diverse but established Third World customs as public restrictions on women, female circumcision, or the immolation of widows? Why not sanction witchcraft, including animal sacrifices, as a legitimate, alternative life-style mode? Why not insist that, next to its Gender Studies House, Stanford set up a Witchcraft Studies Institute? Why not require the Medical School to offer courses and degrees in a program of Alternative and Third World Medical Studies? Otherwise doesn't one run the risk of Incorrectly favoring the prejudices of Eurocentric modernism?

Eventually one asks whether the purpose behind Correctism's Multiculturalistic canons is not in fact to eliminate diversity, to create a doctrinaire diversity without substantive differences. Is Correctism compatible in any respect with the idea of diversity or with the university as the traditionally politically neutral place to nurture the free flow of and for diversity of thought and inquiry?

V. From The Twilight of Consensus, Liberty and Reason . . .

One may characterize the nature of modernity as an unbounded complex of open-ended, mutually self-defining reciprocities in which physical and subjective realities have increasingly merged. It exists in terms of principles of fluid, flexible interaction, circulation, distinction and relation, and mutual self-definition. Such principles distinguish the physical and conceptual dynamics of the modern era in structuring both the political and technological foundations of the Free World. Science and technology reflect these principles, for example, in equations which describe the laws of motion and electricity, where each moment defines and in turn is a function of the others.

Politically these principles express themselves in the concept of the contract - in the open reciprocity of multi-dimensional agreements and laws that define and regulate social and economic intercourse. The law of contract is based upon the open-ended mutuality of free recognition and assent, whereby each person acknowledges the other, in effect, as a mirror of oneself, each freely binding himself to the other in the framework of the agreement. Because rights are founded in mutual recognition and acknowledgment, only through this process do they, along with correlative duties, come into existence, whether on an individual basis or as social contracts in the form of constitutions and treaties. Rights in a free society require personal responsibility, accountability and obligation premised in the idea of citizen self-reliance. Established exclusively through consensus, they cannot be unilaterally declared by the ideologically illuminated to serve ulterior purposes.

To avoid breakdown and anarchy, social integrity requires stability and consensus in belief and behavior. The U.S. Constitution embodies the trial and error, wisdom and reflection of centuries of history. Over nearly 400 years America's unique cultural experiment has shaped its social consensus and national cultural unity.

Only in the modern era, beginning in the West, has the principle of rights based on the notion of universal consensus in the form of the social contract, the idea of the constitution, significantly implanted itself, to then take root elsewhere in the world. And in the political thought traditions of the West, the origin and structure of rights founded in consensus is understood as an outgrowth of the faculty of reason. Only in this environment could Correctists count on permission to voice their ideas. Elsewhere they might be tortured, burned alive, hacked to death, or, if lucky, simply starved or shot.

But Correctism constricts the open, fluid reciprocity of individual human interaction that manifests the kind of freedom and rights uniquely enjoyed in the modern era. It engineers artificial equalities, obliges conformity, pits individuals and groups against each other, while generating, as at Stanford, discord and confusion. In the name of Equality, it strangles Liberty, misunderstanding the former as the basis of the latter. Under Liberty, rights constitute themselves through consensus among free individuals from the bottom up, under Equality, pseudo-"rights" are decreed and imposed by the Elite from the top down.

Levitating itself with the pinions of its self-establishing absolutism, employing the value-relativistic, pseudo-cognitive tools of deconstruction, Correctism sets about to debilitate cultural integrity, undermine consensus, and redefine History and Constitution. Defying patience and tolerance in testing and stretching America's long-established willingness to accept diversity, Correctism seeks to overthrow traditional culture in order to impose the utopian absolutes of its ideological agenda and thereby gain social and political ascendancy. As the exception proves the rule, so do the transgressions of our past comprise the substance of our historical consensus, and therefore justify its demise. To legitimize their "alternative" lifestyles and policies, Correctists deal with sin as traditionally conceived by unilaterally declaring its non-existence, vilifying opponents with the usual epithets.

Correctism unwittingly falls to Irony in failing Reason. Self-reliance is anathema to Correctist political power aims. Thus it vehemently opposes free markets and private enterprise. Not individuals, but The State of Correctism must control and allocate accomplishment, resources, and dimensions of choice in the New Utopia. Wealth must achieve "zero-sum" no-growth to necessitate socialistic redistributionism, thereby assuring power. "Choice" rights are Correctively allocated: the "choice" for abortion is encouraged, now even in schools, parental choice for alternative schooling not. Via affirmative action and quotas Correctism transfers arbitrary discrimination and achieves results opposite to its proclaimed egalitarian goals. In the name of expanding "rights," the result is to enforce a structure of "inclusion" via practiced exclusion in ethnically "norming" and reducing standards and values to lowest common denominators. This injures all, but especially the intended beneficiaries, who as a result do not learn self-reliance or acquire competence in terms of global benchmarks. The Parable of the Loaves and Fishes is totally lost on Correctists, dependency assured.

By contrast, reasoned discrimination in terms of behavior, its necessary limits, and relevant qualification and merit are imperatives of social integrity and balance. The ideal of universal equality does not oblige absolute sameness or require the obliteration of substantive differences, or the curious, ironic enforcement of Multicultural Diversity to achieve conforming similitude. Rather it signifies equal worth in judgment before God and the Law. It presupposes Liberty as the primary social consensus Right of Man, which establishes the right, indeed inducement if not command, for each to fulfill himself according to his own maximum differing abilities and desires within the frameworks and standards required for social integrity. Reasoned discrimination signifies the inherent multi-dimensional diversity of humankind to function and self-fulfill within the structures of Ordered Liberty.

Correctism achieves its curious, self-contradictory diversity in conformity by opposing reasoned discrimination. Instead, it establishes an artificial, formalistic "Multiculturalism" founded in superficial differences while outlawing substantive distinctions. Its opposition to Reason as the faculty of discriminating and relating translates socially into Sensitivity imperatives and a plurality of taboo "Isms." For example, under Social Sensitivity Correctness, one must scrupulously avoid Lookism or Ableism, which favor appearance and ability. And in ever expanding the frontiers of Victimhood, Correctism will no doubt soon decree "Humorism" in order to protect the humor-impaired. After all, with so much oppression in the world, how dare anyone laugh or enjoy life. That would indeed be Insensitive.

VI. . . . Into The Night of Correctitude

Correctism attacks higher education not just because the latter has channeled knowledge oriented to the West, but also for its Western "logocentric" interpretation of this knowledge. Interpretation and reason lie at the heart of higher education. They involve the ability to understand principles, knowledge and things in the architecture of their reciprocities, i.e. their meaning. Meaning signifies the relationships of parts within the whole and to the whole. Each whole reveals a self-defining recognizable conceptual order or inner logic.

Thus logic may be defined as the structure of meaning, and validity as how things objectively and consistently relate to each other within their contexts. Logic and validity necessarily incorporate hierarchy and distinction to make possible knowing and understanding, to recognize and relate aspects to each other and to situations. This holds true across the span of human experience, from mathematics to literature.

But following the "deconstructionistic" theories preached by Correctism's clerics, neither objective validity nor hierarchy in distinctions exist. Values and distinctions are relative, authors can be read to mean whatever the reader wishes. What formerly constituted higher education necessarily becomes meaningless because the meaning of meaning itself dissolves into nothingness. Unmasked, logical concepts and distinctions in meaning and validity are ploys and tools used to deceive and exploit. Without objective distinctions, perspectives collapse into formlessness, differences vanish into the night.

Correctism attacks the meaning of genuine diversity with its self-contradictory premise that the differences of cultural diversity have equal validity. A culture without value distinctions either within itself or in comparison to others is, in fact, no culture at all. Wherever, whatever one does, it's all the same. There can be no valid difference between, for example, Bach and cacophony, Jackson Pollack and ape paintings, women's rights in America, their absence in the Mid-East. In effect, the notion of cultural equity reduces diversity to an undifferentiated, meaningless mass of non-distinction and undistinctness - distinctions without differences. Intelligence is nothing but a bias.

In reducing the meaning of difference and distinction to sameness, the Egalitarian imperative cleaves an abyss between equality as a pure, absolute abstraction and concrete diversity in reality - reminding one of Hegel's quip about Schelling's notion of the Absolute (here Equality) as the night wherein all cows are black.

In so Correcting reality for the sake of egalitarian absolutism, Correctism reveals its incompatibility with the concrete diversity of pluralistic freedom. In extreme form, it becomes what Hegel described concerning the French Revolution as "The Terror," the tyranny of abstract utopian ideals over concrete reality.

In the process, students are the true victims. Whatever one's gender or color, success in the modern era requires distinction in math, science, technology, communication skills, mental prowess, personal responsibility and self-discipline. But these skills would establish self-reliance, precisely what Correctism must discourage in order to cultivate dependency and therefore a permanent need for its ideological control and programs of benefit allocations. Besides, self-reliance is individualistic and therefore selfish, discriminatory, obviously Eurocentrically exploitative, and otherwise simply unfair.

Indeed, Correctism specializes in discriminatory casuistry. Not death and suffering per se, but by whom and where it happens matters. America is the enemy, Central American revolutionaries models of Justice and Correctness. Peace is an absolute value with relative, deliberate applications. Discrimination is but transferred, quotas enforced. White males, and now possibly Asians, need not apply. Excellence is unfair, talent, merit, effort and hard work inequitable. Competition must be abolished. Equality requires conformity. Group consciousness by the Correct Groups vassalizes the individual through Sensitivity indoctrination into Correct Think. Disagreement will not be breached, dissent must be shouted down. Truth becomes tyranny.

Effacing the old distinctions of logic and validity, their will to power absolved from the claims of tradition and reason, the new cap and gownned Priesthoods of Correctness assemble their Followers - the Gender/Color-Concerned, the Hetero- and Logophobic, and the Ecofaithful, light the torches of Oppression and Victimhood in the darkness of Ismness, and march deconstructively forth to the Promised Utopia of Correctitude.

EPILOGUE

A Parting Shot . . .

The university does not indeed exist to engage in social and cultural self-destruction to serve ideological whimsey and the guile of charlatans. It does not exist in order that Correctism may divest it of its natural and open diversity to impose an artificial and doctrinaire Multiculturalism. Given Correctism's use and abuse of the campus as a propaganda and indoctrination forum, how much longer can we of the Incorrect mainstream indulge Correctism's excesses? The time has come to "de-Correct" Correctism, rescue the university from Utopia, and get on with the Great Dialogue.

And Back to the Campus . . .

But maybe on the next visit to Stanford I should just wimp out. First of all I ought to avoid Parkism in the inner campus, and, to be more Correct and help the Environment, bike or walk in. Moreover, I could donate our camper van to the Homeless, or offer it as housing to one of the African student's three wives and help promote Third World Awareness.. Then, to ease my bad conscience, or at least try to conceal it, I might modify my appearance - grow a beard, alter my hairstyle (with the little I have left), change my glasses to the small, wire-rim John Lennon kind, lose weight (probably a lot) to acquire that astringent Concerned look, abjure meat and all animal products, wear a "Peace Now!" and "I Care!" type of button, and maybe carry around a couple of Correct-appearing publications, something like Earth First Times, Rainbow/Gender Gazette, Peace Alert Weekly, A Primer for Concerned Activists, or, possibly, The Secret Life of Mushrooms. Attending Sensitivity workshops would be a must, I'm sure I badly need them. Fortunately, my clothes are already pretty shoddy (the thinner I get, the baggier, the better), so I won't have to worry about them. I've got some old corduroy suits and Carl Sagen turtlenecks I could press into service. Beyond that there's not much I can do about my Euromale Gender/Color status. Perhaps I should get unmarried (after all, Sandy is a Republican, marriage only one togetherness among many), and take up with a campus Gender/Color Partner or friendly Witch Person to get back into the Community via Stanford's new Domestic Partners Policy. I'm not sure the family would like it, but, ah well, we must all make sacrifices and "Change Now!" for Peace and the Greater Correctitude!

A Philosophical Addendum

In the context of challenges posed by Ideology and Correctism at Stanford, and with essays at elucidation to await another day, the following seeks to bottom-line some basic issues facing Western thought:

Modern man typically and naturally regards the world as composed of a physical "objective" reality "out there," and an inner, "subjective" mind in the "here" of one's thoughts. Physical science teaches, or proceeds from the proposition that the objective realm forms, creates, produces or "causes" what goes on in the mind, including the mind's thoughts about objective reality. Following this line, we are products of nature, though our minds try to discover and control its secrets.

But Western philosophy, in the history of its self-understanding since the ancient Greeks, has mainly, though certainly not entirely, proceeded from the opposite proposition - that reality is grounded in ideas and thought. With Plato, the ideas were themselves eternal and in that sense objective, but as thought, ultimately "subjective," i.e. pertaining to mind rather than matter. Going into the modern era, truth became ultimately subjective, structured in and as forms of thought. Objectivity and subjectivity evolved into reciprocities of identity and difference. With the mechanization of nature mind could subject physical reality and eventually social reality to technologies of control and transformation. Consciousness revealed itself to be the master of reality as both its source and purpose.

Yet reciprocities embody ironic moments - the confusion of appearances with realities, the positive with the negative, portending results opposite intentions. Without a limiting "ground," modern subjectivity has the potential, through an unbridled "will to power," or "will to one's own will," to infinitely expand itself and self-destruct in the process. The fundamental issue is now whether or how truth in and as subjectivity can, between horizons of nihilism and revelation, regain or unveil a transcending "objective" ground of its own history, or go beyond self-understanding in mutual reflections of the subjective and objective. Will the potential for unlimited self-expansion in and as History sacrifice the hard-won benefits of Reason, Liberty and Constitution so especially achieved and enjoyed in America? Though America's traditional religious faith offers transcendent answers, the American grass-roots consensus must also be able to respond to the Ideological challenge with reason and articulated mind beyond trying to shout or outvote Ideologists with "Back to Basics!" slogans and political "gut" issues.

Ideology is the technology of thought applied by subjectivity to itself as an object to programmatically restructure and master social reality. It represents a self-radicalizing form of the modern subjectivity of truth. Truth becomes pure self --revelation. "Deconstructively" breaking off the shackles of "objective" history and tradition, seeking the "transvaluation of all values" in the drive for self-absolutism, it arbitrarily defines and sets its own limits. This signifies a full scale "Culture War" against the conceptual underpinnings, values, reason and order of the West. The Terror of the French Revolution, Bolshevism, the Third Reich and Pol Pot represent extremes of what can result when the subjectivity of truth as the principle of the modern era indulges itself in "grounding its own ground."

Press Release

The Joey Fournier Victim Services will be holding a benefit dinner on the evening of Saturday May 11, 1991 at the Burlington Marriott. The event will feature Joe Morgan and some of The Red Sox, with Lovell Dyett of WBZ as Master of Ceremonies. The players will graciously sign autographs for us during the social hour from 6:30 to 7:30 P.M. Dinner will follow at 7:45 P.M.

The purpose of the event is to emphasize our commitment to reasserting traditional family values that are a foundation for a caring society.

The mission of The Joey Fournier Victim Services is two-fold. The first is to provide meaningful support to the victims of violent crime and their families through professional counseling, and referrals to social and legal agencies. The second is to reduce violent crime through violence prevention education and public awareness. People travel from all areas of our state to take advantage of our unique counseling, which is based on guidelines of NOVA, The National Organization of Victim Assistance.

Our information center and headquarters is located at 14 Beacon Street in downtown Boston. The Center provides convenient access for victims seeking our services. We maintain a 24 hour toll-free Hotline for victims and the relatives of murder victims.

We need your help to support our important work. Tickets are priced at $50 and include a full course Roast Beef Dinner. Your tax-deductible donation will help us make Massachusetts a safer, more compassionate place to live, work and raise a family.

President George Bush
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President,

I am writing to request your support of The Joey Fournier Victim Services, Inc., a non-profit organization founded on October 26, 1990 in memory of my 17 year-old brother, Joey, who was murdered in 1974 by William Horton. The mission of The Joey Fournier Victim Services is two-fold. The first is to reduce violent crime through educational programs and substantive changes in the criminal justice system. The second is to provide meaningful support to the victims of violent crime and their families through psychological counseling and referrals to social and legal agencies.

During your presidential campaign, I was happy to have the opportunity to tell Americans the truth about Governor Dukakis' furlough program, and that Governor Dukakis had commuted the sentences of 28 first-degree murderers and 25 second-degree murderers.

I was fortunate to be present to hear your address of March 5, 1991 at The Attorney General's Summit on Law enforcement responses to Violent Crime in Washington, D.C. You remarked that, during the first three days of the ground offensive, more Americans were killed in some American cities than at the entire Kuwaiti Front. You pledged to continue to fight crime and give back our streets to America's families. I was moved by your sincere concern for victims and your dedication to making America's schools, neighborhoods and homes, safe. I support your Crime Bill, and I will do everything I can to ensure its passage with Congress.

The need for our services, unfortunately continues to grow. Crime statistics are staggering! Every 19 seconds in America, a violent crime is committed. Every 24 minutes someone is murdered. Massachusetts is setting record high murder rates. The Joey Fournier Victim Services believes that this trend towards violence must be addressed with positive action. As an organization whose members are victims themselves, The Joey Fournier Victim Services has a unique perspective to offer the community as it works to reduce violent crime.

In our first year and a half, we have initiated several areas of activity with great success. Our educational program plays an important role in the prevention of violent crime by sensitizing the community to the ravages of violence. Presentations at schools, civic meetings, and media events increase public awareness about the long-term effects of violence by placing a human face on the statistics, and provide a grass-roots forum for community action. We received a Mayor Flynn's Safe Neighborhoods mini-grant on December 18, 1990 to bring our violence prevention program to the youth of Boston. We are currently developing a violence prevention program for the Greater Lawrence area. Violence prevention and counseling programs are planned for each county across the state.

Regarding victim support, The Joey Fournier Victim Services has already implemented group counseling for the families of murder victims at the Psychological Center of Greater Lawrence and at our office in Boston. Counseling is available to anyone who has had a member of his/her family murdered. People from all areas of our state travel to take advantage of this unique counseling, which is based on guidelines from NOVA, The National Organization Of Victim Assistance. Since most murders are committed in poorer neighborhoods, family members generally have no coverage, and even in those cases where the family does have coverage, it is generally limited to $500. The Joey Fournier Victim Services covers all uninsured costs, so that no one in need is denied this vital counseling.

The organization has had good results raising funds from individuals and with special events. We are currently engaged in strategic planning and seeking to diversify our revenue base. The Joey Fournier Victim Services maintains an office at 14 Beacon Street in downtown Boston, diagonally across from the State House. We are proud of the commitment and deep ties to the community represented by our Boards of Directors and Advisors, who will be instrumental in making our efforts even more successful.

President Bush, with your support The Joey Fournier Victim Services can substantially curb crime and provide the services that victims and the families of murder victims desperately need. Your assistance will help us make Massachusetts a safer, more compassionate place to live, work and raise a family. Thank you in advance for your help.

Sincerely,

Donna Fournier Cuomo

PROSPECTUS

The Joey Fournier Services

The Joey Fournier Services is a Massachusetts-based non-profit 501(c)(3) organization. It was founded on October 26, 1989 by Donna Fournier Cuomo in memory of her brother Joey, who was murdered on that day in 1974 by William Horton, a convicted felon on parole for attempted murder. Mr. Horton was found guilty of first-degree murder and sentenced to life in prison without possibility of parole in 1975. While on furlough in 1986, he escaped to Maryland where he attacked a young couple in their home, repeatedly raping the woman and slashing the man.

As a result of this series of events, Mrs. Cuomo organized a citizens' petition drive and collected 52,407 certified signatures to place an initiative on the state ballot to ban prison furloughs for first-degree murderers. This law was passed by the state Legislature just prior to the election.

During the signature drive, Donna came in contact with other families of murder victims and quickly recognized that there was not only a need to prevent violence through legislation and community education but an even greater need to provide meaningful psychological support for surviving family members.

MISSION

The mission of The Joey Fournier Services is two-fold. The first is to provide meaningful support to the victims of violent crime and their families through psychological counseling and referrals to social and legal agencies. The second is to reduce violent crime through educational programs and substantive changes in the criminal justice system.

MEMBERS

The Joey Fournier Services has approximately 1,000 contributors and some 3,000 affiliate members through a network of victim support groups. The Committee is in the process of compiling a data base of victims of violent crime and families of murder victims. This will be the most extensive data base of its kind in the state.

AREA SERVED

The Joey Fournier Services serves victims of violent crime and families of murder victims throughout Massachusetts. Counseling is available to anyone who has had a member of his/her family murdered. Programs are being conducted in Lawrence and Boston, with future sites planned within each county in the state.

VICTIM'S HOT LINE

The Joey Fournier Services maintains a 24-hour toll-free victim's hot line, 1-800-533-JOEY, which provides victims of violent crime and their families referrals to social and legal agencies, professional counseling, and other victim support groups.

VIOLENCE PREVENTION

The Joey Fournier Services plays an important role in the prevention of violent crime by sensitizing the community to the ravages of violence. It administers a network of violence prevention educational programs. Presentations at schools, civic meetings, and media events increase public awareness about the long-term effects of violence by placing a human face on the statistics, and provide a grass-roots forum for community action.

The Joey Fournier Services also is working to develop a public school curriculum for grades K-12 to help prevent violent crime before it starts by educating children to the long-term effects of violence on the victim and the perpetrator. Northeastern University has expressed real interest in collaborating on this project.

PROFESSIONAL COUNSELING

The Joey Fournier Services provides group counseling for the families of murder victims. These sessions follow NOVA guidelines using a clinical psychologist and a victim facilitator. The Joey Fournier Services covers all uninsured costs so no one in need is denied this vital counseling.

COALITION- BUILDING

The Joey Fournier Services facilitates the building of a network of victim support groups, such as Parents of Murdered Children, Young Adult Siblings Group, and Victims for Victims.

LEGISLATION

Victim's rights advocates in Massachusetts have identified four bills for special attention. The first bill repeals the CORI law -- the Criminal Offenders Records Information Act of 1972. The preferred version of the bill calls for permanently opening the records of convicted criminals and requires the state to notify victims, their families, local police, and witnesses before a prisoner is released. The second bill stops a Governor from commuting a sentence for a second-degree murderer before he/she has served 25 years, and for a first-degree murderer before 40 years. The third bill requires a hearing before a judge and jury when and if a Governor recommends commutation of sentence for a first-degree murderer. The fourth bill is for truth in sentencing. At the time of sentencing, someone convicted of a violent crime will receive his/her statutory sentence and then a second disciplinary sentence, from which time for good behavior can be deducted. So, if a person is sentenced to 12-20 years, he/she is going to serve a minimum of 12 years.

TESTIMONIALS

"Having lost our son to murder, we have made use of The Joey Fournier Victim Services. Unfortunately, the victims have for too long been neglected. Donna Cuomo is providing a much needed service and is deserving of support."

John and Donna Belmore, parents of murder victim, Mark Belmore

"The professional counseling provided by psychologists and victim-facilitators, coupled with the program's public awareness and community education campaign provide a tremendous resource for violence prevention and coping with the destructive impact of crime in our neighborhoods."

James T. Brett, Chairman of Criminal Justice
Massachusetts House of Representatives

"Mrs. Cuomo has worked tirelessly in promoting her organization. She is a dedicated and conscientious person, who has in the past and continues to work closely with the Boston Police Department in assisting victims of crime and the families of murder victims."

William R. Celester, Deputy Superintendent
Commanding Area "B", Boston Police

"Mrs. Cuomo has a keen and discerning spirit and is truly dedicated to easing the pain and long-term suffering caused by the sudden and violent loss of a loved one. She goes about her work with intensity, good judgement, and passion. She is a top-notch professional who has given unselfishly of herself for the past year."

Martin Cotton, Executive Director
The Psychological Center of Lawrence

"I offer my firm endorsement of The Joey Fournier Victim Services and the important work it renders. The guidance and support that Mrs. Cuomo and her organization provided to the University and to the Belmore family after this tragedy were truly priceless."

John A. Curry, President
Northeastern University

"I first met Donna Cuomo at a press conference that announced the founding of The Joey Fournier Victim Services. With that meeting, a whole new life started for me and countless others, thanks to Donna. We owe a great debt to an extraordinary woman."

Kay and Arthur Dulong, parents of murder victim, Larry Dulong

"The Boston area has few mental health providers that appropriately and effectively serve homicide survivors. I welcome the dedicated efforts of The Joey Fournier Victim Services to promote public awareness and provide education to the Boston community about the violence in our city. Funding programs such as The Joey Fournier Victim Services, is necessary in our effort to combat violence and provide services for those who ultimately become the victims of this violence."

Newman Flanagan, District Attorney
Suffolk County

"The Joey Fournier Victim Services has become a vital addition to the network of agencies working to fight crime and victimization. These efforts have included founding support groups, helping to formulate public policy on victim related issues such as access to criminal offender information, and organizing community based education and public awareness events. Mrs. Cuomo has demonstrated outstanding commitment and dedication to these issues."

Karen McLaughlin, Executive Director
Massachusetts Victim and Witness
Assistance Board

"Working with the Joey Fournier Victim Services has made a big difference in my ability to cope with Tiffany's loss. I am grateful to be part of the organization's violence prevention program which will help us win back our neighborhoods and keep our children safe."

Alice Moore, mother of murder victim, Darlene 'Tiffany' Moore

"We, here in the College of Criminal Justice have worked very closely with, and realize the importance of The Joey Fournier Victim Services. The organization and Mrs. Donna Cuomo, its Director, were instrumental in the healing process for the Belmore family, as well as for us here in the College."

Norman Roseblatt, Dean of Criminal Justice
Northeastern University

"Donna is perhaps the most dedicated, hard-working individual that I have ever encountered. Creative, tenacious, and genuinely committed to establishing substantive support services for victims and their families, she displays a rare combination of strength, compassion and vulnerability, which can only come from one who understands first-hand the trauma resulting from the violent death of a loved one. With the involvement of leaders in the public and private sector, Donna and her organization will have a far-reaching impact on crime and victims' rights."

Elliot Savitz, President
Direct Marketing Group, Waltham

"With the help of the psychologists and the victim-facilitators of the Joey Fournier Victim Services organization, I am working through my problems, and receiving the help to cope with the terrible loss of my son John's murder."

Agatha Sebastian, mother of murder victim, John Sebastian

"As a clinical psychologist, I have helped to facilitate the support groups offered by The Joey Fournier Victim Services. During that course of time, I have been enormously impressed by the multiple services that the organization provides, and by the singular dedication of its Director, Donna Fournier Cuomo. She has displayed unbounded compassion and energy in bringing people together to help victims recover from tragedy and to prevent further violence through their violence prevention program."

Allen Sherman, Ph.D.
The Psychological Center of Lawrence

"Congratulations on setting up The Joey Fournier Victim Services Center. I know the Center will be of great help to many victims and their families, as well as, do great things for Massachusetts. I support and commend you... I know first-hand the pain involved in losing someone I love so very much. It takes a lot of determination and perseverance to continue the fight, but it's one fight from which none of us can back away. I truly believe one person can make a difference! God Bless"

Dear Mr. Abraham,

I've done some time in the press galleries of American politics, played the reporter's role and worn the editor's hat. I've had a lot of fun drinking it all in, but eventually it begins to resemble light beer -- great taste, but less filling.

Now I want to get my teeth into something more substantial. I'd like to help you build Republican strength in the House. I want to get involved, to contribute my energy to the GOP.

That I've almost always been registered as an independent is a reflection of my journalistic professionalism, not my politics. As a newsman, I believe it is imperative to maintain a high standard of objectivity and non-partisanship everywhere outside the voting booth. So I've remained independent in every respect.

I want to make a difference, so I'm ready to sign on with the party for which I feel the greatest kinship. I'm ready to fight for its causes and its champions. And I can be very effective.

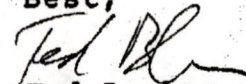

As my resume spells out, I'm a skilled professional. I work hard and don't quit until I get a job done and done well. I'm a good soldier who knows how to take orders and follow through, adding my own creativity to solve problems that might crop up along the way. I'll tackle anything you can throw at me.

The Republican Party strikes me as most receptive to new ideas. That's important to me. I've seen how Democratically imposed political correctness can bankrupt a government, both here in New York and in Massachusetts. I cannot abide by the welfare-state, go-along-to-get-along mentality that permeates debate in Democratically dominated politics.

In terms of issues, I find myself most often coming down on the side of conservatives: Racial quotas, controlling health care costs, the death penalty and taxes are just a few examples. Quotas can mislead those who benefit and give rise to reverse discrimination. Health care costs are running out of control because accountability is lacking. The death penalty does have a deterrent effect.

So it makes sense to me to work for the GOP. It's been great fun to be a reporter. But what you do makes a difference, and besides, it might turn out to be even more fun.

Best,

Ted Bunker

EXPERIENCE

In the more than 10 years I have worked as a journalist, my reporting on politics and government has appeared in national and metropolitan newspapers and magazines, as well as a variety of smaller publications. Currently I am a reporter in the City Hall bureau of the New York Daily News. Previously, as a reporter for the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram & Gazette from 1981 to 1988, I covered local, regional, state and national politics and political figures. During those years, I also worked as a business reporter, bureau manager and weekend assignment editor. Before joining the T&G, I was a reporter and editor for a range of newspapers and magazines in the Seattle area, ending that four-year period at the Seattle Post-Intelligencer. In between my work in Worcester and the Daily News, where I started on Jan. 2, I was an editor and writer for two top trade publications covering the computer industry. During much of my career, concurrent with my fulltime reporting, I've acted as a stringer for other publications. Most recently my freelance work has appeared in the national and financial sections of The New York Times and of Time magazine.

SKILLS

Over the years, I've developed -- and used -- the ability to supervise staff, assign and edit stories, design and lay out pages, and conduct investigative projects. I've also earned a reputation as a skillful reporter and editor who is both fair and accurate. I've built up difficult beats from scratch, developed information sources and formed lasting relationships with people in business and government nationwide.

EDUCATION

I hold a Master of Public Administration degree from Harvard University's Kennedy School (1986), where my studies focused on the management of politics and on political economics. I studied under some of the nation's best-known scholars, such as Richard Neustadt, Robert Reich and Thomas Schelling. I may not agree with them, but I know their methods and their arguments well. While at Harvard, I met dozens of people active at all levels of politics and government. I earned my degree as a part-time student -- a rarity at Harvard -- attending classes during off-hours while working a full-time reporting job in Worcester.

I earned my BA from the University of Washington in 1978. On a full scholarship, I majored in editorial journalism, taking an equal number of courses in English and minoring in politics and economics.

I spent three semesters at Kenyon College, majoring in English, before leaving in 1974 to work for two years as a brokerage clerk and as a political fund-raiser.

Dear Lou:

My friend, your father-in-law, wrote me about your interest in working for the Federal Aviation Administration, preferably in the Boston area.

If you have not already done so, the first thing you should do is complete the enclosed Form 171, Application for Federal Employment. You may then forward it to Ms. Wanda Reyna, Federal Aviation Administration, APN 200, 800 Independence Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20591. Please make sure that you indicate in a short note to Ms. Reyna that you are interested in working in the Boston area. She will make sure it gets into the system.

I hope this information is helpful. Good luck.

Sincerely,

Dear Andy:

Hope you can be of some help to me and my son in law. He told me if we don't know anyone these papers will go unused.

I would be ever so grateful for your help and information to him in obtaining a position according to his resume.

Again Thanks for your help

I AM INTERESTED IN ANY INFORMATION YOU CAN OBTAIN ~~FOR~~^{FROM} WASHINGTON PEOPLE, CONCERNING HOW TO APPLY AND WHAT REQUIREMENTS THERE ARE FOR EMPLOYMENT WITH THE FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION. I AM AWARE OF THEIR AREA OF RESPONSIBILITIES, BUT NEED MORE INFORMATION FROM THE SOURCE (D.C.) I BELIEVE THAT THEY HAVE A NEED FOR INSPECTORS AND WHAT THEY CALL DESIGNATED ENGINEERING REPRESENTATIVES.

THE TYPE OF F.A.A. WORK AND WHAT IS NEEDED IN THE BOSTON AREA IS WHAT I AM MOST INTERESTED IN.

I'VE ENCLOSED A RESUME, FOR YOUR USE. IT O.K. TO SEND IT OUT.

THANKS ALOT

Dear Jason:

Your father wrote me sometime ago to tell me about your and your roommates' terrific support for President Bush and about your open invitation to the President to come by your house for "an hour of beer, pasta and relaxation." I told the President about your offer, and he asked me to let you know how much he appreciates it. He also asked me to pass along to you the enclosed photo. It comes with his thanks and his warm regards.

I hope you had a great year at Georgetown. Please give my best to all your family.

Dear Paul

Thank you for your letter of 1-18-91. The support Jason and his friends give the President is greatly appreciated. I am sure that the President would love to join the Georgetown classmates for pasta and beer; but I doubt such a visit is possible. I'll contact Jason soon to say "thanks for the invite".

My best to all in the Bay State. Sincerely, Andy Card

Dear Andy,

By way of Re-introduction, I am the person who was with Prime Computer when we spoke on the phone during the campaign. Subsequent to that you arranged for my family to be in the Rose Garden when the President greeted the Oakland A's. My nephew, Jim Corsi, was a pitcher on the team. I changed my party affiliation in '89 and was elected as a delegate to the Republican State Convention. I introduced myself to you after you spoke at the convention.

My son, Jason, is a sophomore at Georgetown and lives in a house (3718 RST; - 202-337-0175) with 5 classmates. They are all student/athletes - but most importantly they are good kids. We were talking about the war on the phone today and he was saying how great the President is and what a terrible burden he is bearing. Jason said, "Dad, he must need a break. I wonder if he'd come over to the house for an hour of beer, pasta, and relaxation. And we could tell him how strongly we support him." If the President needs a sanity check with some great young Americans, Andy, tell him to drop in. Our prayers are with you,
Paul Connelly

Dear Paul -

Thank you for your letter. I'm glad details were worked out so that you could be part of the President's recognition of the World Champion Oakland A's in the Rose Garden.

Yes, I would be pleased to be able to meet with you during one of your visits to Washington. My assistant, Linda Gamksetea, handles my schedule. You can reach her at (202) 456-2533.

Best wishes for the New Year!
