Dear Andy:

This morning I received your nice letter. It was indeed kind of you to write me.

I really enjoyed meeting you and I wish to compliment you on your speech it was so direct, factual and delivered in a positive honest manner. You show a real interest in serving people well and I so appreciate your taking time for the letter I directed to President Bush.

The Chairman's Advisory Board meeting was wonderful. I made acquaintances with so many new Republican friends. I am enclosing a letter which might interest you from John Penko concerning small business.

I am looking forward to the Chairman's Advisory Board spring meeting as well as the President's Club meeting next fall.

Andy, thanks again for your nice letter. I am glad President Bush has you on his team.

Kind regards.

Both Lynn and I certainly enjoyed having the opportunity to meet you at the Chairman's Advisory Board in Washington DC. I found the meeting informative and interesting and look forward to future sessions.

Your efforts and activities on behalf of Small Businesses are to be commended. The small businesses in America certainly need more representation because what is good for small businesses is good for all business. There needs to be more incentive for promoting entrepreneur enterprises.

We look forward to seeing you again in the spring and also at the convention. Have a wonderful Thanksgiving.

Mr. Andrew Card,
Special Assistant to the President

Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. Card:

First of all, I would like to sincerely wish you and your colleagues a Merry Christmas, in advance...

I am writing to request your assistance with two separate matters that are of vital importance to me.

The initial issue concerns a "Petition for Commutation of Sentence" that I filed on or about October 16, 1991 with the Office of the Pardon Attorney (U.S. Dept. of Justice, Washington, D.C. 20530). I have been unable to find out the status of my petition. It does not involve litigation...

Briefly, I am currently serving a 16 month sentence at the F.C.I. in Big Spring, Texas. My Registration Number is 17893-038.

My offenses involved mailing threatening communications to several government officials, but they were not true threats. It was part of a "divorce situation", and an attempt to get my ex-wife in trouble...

The offenses did not involve violence nor drugs...

I am sincerely and deeply remorseful for my acts of misconduct...

The secondary matter for which I seek your assistance is my effort to obtain acceptance in to the -3-

"Home Confinement Program" (House Arrest) for the final 6 months of my sentence. It is sponsored by the Federal Bureau of Prisons...

This program would help to facilitate my reintegration into the community...

Mr. Card, I am a native, legal resident and registered voter (Republican) in Massachusetts. I met you on a number of occasions when you were a State Representative in the early '80's. I have always been a great admirer of yours.

Sir, I am beseeching your help with the 2 matters that I have previously mentioned...

I look forward to your reply at your earliest possible convenience.

Thank you very much for

your valuable time and considerate attention. I do truly appreciate it.

I honestly do not know where else I can turn for assistance, except to you...

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Card:

I'm writing to express my concern about the proposed FDA Enforcement Bill (H.R. 2597) and to voice my opposition to many of its provisions. I particularly object to the elimination of limits to the current subpoena authority, to the broadly expanded inspection rights for the FDA, and to the imposition of civil penalties. In my opinion it removes significant due process protection from honest businesspeople and makes the FDA judge, jury, and policeman. I understand the need for strong FDA protection, but it seems to me that the FDA has demonstrated it already has the power that it needs to protect the legitimate interests of the public.

Please do whatever you can to oppose increasing the power of the FDA to put more burdensome regulations on an industry which has served the public interest well.

Dear Mr. Card:

I have some thoughts on H.R. 2497.

Many of our employees live in Kansas even though our business location is on the Missouri side of the state line.

Our agency has several clients who deal with the FDA. Therefore, we are aware of many of the benefits provided to the industry by the FDA. And as consumers, as well as business people, we know the FDA is helpful to many people.

From a business standpoint, however, we feel that additional regulations will only cause us more expense in working with our clients which in this economic environment presents a severe problem. And with the clout the FDA already has to protect the public interest it appears this bill will increase costs for all of us without adding protection for anyone.

I hope you will oppose this bill unless it is drastically revised.

I appreciate your attention to my thoughts.

Re: Bill H.R. 2597

Dear Mr. Card:

As owner and president of one of New England's largest advertising agencies, I am writing to share my deep concerns about FDA enforcement bill H.R. 2597.

With annual billings approaching $100 million, 90 employees, and the responsibility of a number of blue chip accounts such as Ocean Spray, Tetley Tea and Bennigans/Steak and Ale restaurants, it's my responsibility as a leader in the advertising community, to let you know my misgivings.

There are three specific provisions of the bill that I believe should be further scrutinized even though they have been amended in the latest draft. They are: Subpoena authority, Inspections, and Civil Penalties.

Subpoena Authority: While current subpoena authority is very broad, it wisely limits access to irrelevant financial, confidential commercial, and personal information. This bill voids such limits and makes objections too burdensome and improper subpoenas nearly impossible.

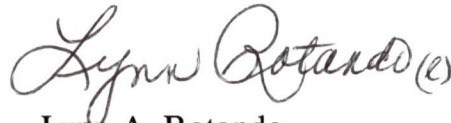

Inspections: Bill H.R. 2597 greatly expands FDA business inspection authority to permit the copying of any records and to take on-sight photos. FDA regulatees could be required to create and maintain any records of any type that the agency deems necessary. FDA inspectors could even make arrest without a warrant.

Civil Penalties: The FDA could fine individuals $250,000 and companies $1 million for each infraction of the FFDCA, no matter how insignificant or innocent. A special statute of limitations would allow the agency up to ten years to bring an action. In effect, the FDA would become investigator, prosecutor, While I recognize the need for a strong FDA, I believe the agency has recently demonstrated that it has all the clout it needs to protect the public. The bill as it is presently written will give inordinate power to the agency.

In closing, I appreciate the attention you've afforded me and welcome any opposition the Bush Administration can apply.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Card:

I am writing in regard to the F.D.A Enforcement Bill (H.R. 2597) which was recently passed by the Health and Environment Subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, I oppose this bill.

I oppose the Subpoena authority, as amended in latest draft, giving the F.D.A the power to inspect financial, confidential and personal information. The current bill would make objections to burdensome and improper subpoenas nearly impossible. F.D.A. business inspections would be expanded to permit copying of records and on-sight photographs. These F.D.A inspectors could carry guns and make arrests without warrants. This is clearly a significant conflict with the due process protection this country guarantees all citizens, including honest business people.

The notion that the F.D.A alone would have the power to fine individuals up to $250,000 for each infraction of the FFDCA, no matter how insignificant, is ludicrous. Creating a special statute of limitations allowing the agency up to 10 years to bring citations, in effect, turns the F.D.A into investigator, enforcer, prosecutor, judge and jury. Clearly a conflict of interest when handled by one and only one body.

Although I praise both Republicans for voting against this bill and Democrats for seeking significant revisions to earlier drafts, I would ask that all support be withheld until drastic revisions protecting the rights we as a nation have so vehemently defended through the years are incorporated to protect individuals and businesses.

I believe we need an effective and strong F.D.A, but David Kessler has demonstrated his powers and ability to protect the legitimate interests of the public.

NOV 12 1991

Dear Andy:

Thanks so much for seeing Marcelo Trivelli from Santiago, Chile on such short notice. Linda told me how busy your schedule was and I know that you were about to launch the campaign in Houston. I thought - and was glad that you agreed - that a contact with your direct counterpart in the Chilean presidency would be mutually interesting and beneficial.

Marcelo Trivelli, as you know, was in the United States on an International Visitors Program sponsored by the U.S. Information Agency. As we often do at Partners of the Americas, we collaborate with USIA. In this case, Marcelo is making Seattle, Washington part of his official U.S. itinerary, as that state is partnered with Chile.

Enclosed is an information kit on Partners of the Americas. When we met at the dinner for President Collor, I told you how your state of Massachusetts is partnered with Colombia, and 19 states in the U.S. are linked with Brazil. Now you see how Chile is involved. Indeed, 45 U.S. states and the District of Columbia have continuous project oriented relationships with every country to our south in this hemisphere but Cuba and Surinam.

Indeed, many people have called the Partners program - that was founded as the people-to-people component of the Alliance for Progress - as an internationalization of the President's 1000 Points of Light program. It really shows the power that private citizens have to make things happen on the international scene and, through these partnership efforts, to create better relations between the U.S. and our neighbors in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Thanks again for receiving Marcelo. I hope that you will see him back in the U.S. if an official White House visit is worked out next year for Chile's President Aylwin.

With best wishes,

Bill

Partners of the Americas

What It Is

Partners of the Americas is the largest private voluntary organization promoting economic and social development in the Western Hemisphere, while fostering inter-American friendship and cooperation.

The organization pairs U.S. states with sections of Latin America and the Caribbean into 60 "partnerships." For example, Kansas is paired with Paraguay, Alabama with Guatemala, and Missouri with Para, Brazil.

Citizens on the two sides of a partnership—north and south—work together to carry out development or educational projects at the grassroots level.

Partner projects range from helping a community produce safer drinking water to helping farmers boost crop yield, from training doctors in advanced medical techniques to creating job opportunities for low-income families.

Today, the 60 partnerships conduct about 2,200 such projects per year, valued at more than $70 million and estimated to benefit more than 100,000 people.

Who Is Involved

More than 20,000 people in 46 U.S. states and 31 Latin American and Caribbean nations call themselves "Partner volunteers."

This pool of skilled, professional talent includes individuals from all walks of life—business executives, farmers, engineers, health professionals, teachers, students, homemakers, journalists, scientists.

Partner volunteers donate their time and expertise to help communities meet locally determined needs. By sharing their skills and mobilizing community resources, they help people help themselves.

Leaders in both the public and private sector support the Partners' program. Every U.S. president and many government leaders throughout Latin America have endorsed the goals of the program since it was founded in 1964. In addition, hundreds of business, educational and civic leaders contribute to the success of Partner projects each year.

Program Areas

Agriculture—Increasing family food production through research and training in vegetable, fruit, grain or dairy production; livestock improvement; poultry and small animal projects; beekeeping; and development of agricultural extension and rural youth programs.

Culture—Exposing citizens to the culture of their Partner area through exchanges of performing, visual and folk artists and through joint programs by professional and lay leaders in the arts and humanities.

Disability—Helping handicapped people by strengthening rehabilitation programs, providing training in special education, promoting the use of low-cost technologies for the handicapped, and expanding jobs and vocational training for disabled citizens.

Economic Development—Creating jobs or income-earning opportunities for people through vocational training, small business assistance, development of cottage industries or marketing cooperatives, and promotion of north-south ties between business associations and industry groups.

Education—Building working relationships between U.S. and Latin educators to: develop community-oriented projects using the school as a learning and resource center; strengthen educational curricula; sponsor joint research and educational training programs; and promote youth and faculty exchanges.

Emergency Preparedness—Helping communities prepare for natural or man-made disasters through projects in: flood control, drought relief, fire prevention, emergency rescue and paramedical training, marine and water safety, airport safety, traffic safety, building construction safety, handling of hazardous wastes, and emergency communications.

Health—Preventing disease and improving public health practices by training health care professionals, providing medical supplies and equipment, establishing rural health or dental programs, improving community sanitation systems, and teaching families about nutrition, maternal and child care, and home health practices.

Sports—Stimulating youth development through the exchange of coaches, physical educators, trainers and athletes who share skills and knowledge to develop school and community sports programs.

International Headquarters

Partners of the Americas is headquartered in Washington, D.C., with field offices serving Brazil, Central America, the Caribbean and Spanish-speaking South America.

This headquarters is the umbrella organization which provides professional support, training and technical assistance to help all 60 partnerships build strong and dynamic voluntary organizations. The Partners' staff also raises financial and inkind resources to support partnership activities.

Support

Nearly 100 major corporations, foundations and government agencies throughout the hemisphere support the Partners' program. Financial contributions by these organizations are made available to partnerships for travel, training, technical assistance and project "seed" money.

The majority of resources used by the partnerships, however, are raised at the local level. With initial start-up funds, the 60 partnerships creatively mobilize assistance—donations, expertise, equipment or inkind contributions—from a vast array of local sponsors.

As a result, the Partners' program leverages small amounts of money into projects worth far more. This is Partners' multiplier effect.

Joining the Partners

Partners of the Americas welcomes the participation of all individuals and organizations willing to share their skills and work toward greater international cooperation among the peoples of the Western Hemisphere.

Dear Andy,

AC HAS SEEN

Congratulations on successfully (and mercifully, quietly) shepherding Gates' nomination through the Senate, to do the job the way it got done is a pretty huge accomplishment these days.

I hope you are still looking @ T. Kennedy's seat, a Republican leadership triumvirate of Weld, Malone and Can-I look pretty good. Despite the talk I just don't see either Weld or Malone running for the Senate, both have a lot to do in their current job and I think it would be a severe handicap to run a campaign under those circumstances.

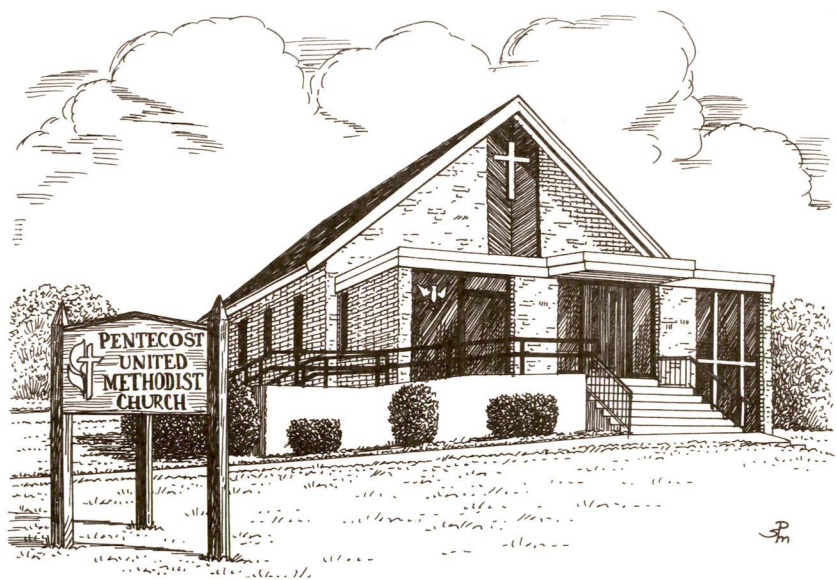

Both are of course doing a great job, but there's so much more to do and I'm sure both want to finish. Of course that doesn't preclude Cellucci, it will definitely be interesting.

Hope all is well with the family and it looks like things are going well on the job.

Bush boosts Kean project

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — President Bush conferred yesterday at Camp David with representatives of a private organization, led by former New Jersey Gov. Thomas Kean, that is seeking to raise as much as $200 million to create "new learning environments" in a redesigned U.S. educational system.

The group, New American Schools Development Corp., is a non-profit company formed at Bush's request by American businesses to seek business, foundation and individual's financial support for "educational design work" that can be applied to communities across the nation as they seek to revamp their educational systems.

Wrapping up a news conference at midday at the White House, Bush said that he had to dash off to the meeting at Camp David, the presidential retreat in Maryland's Catoc-tin Mountains near Gettysburg, Pa.

"It's a wonderful program and I want to go up there and give it strong support," he said.

The program is intended to pay for the work of seven design teams, each seeking to determine what it will take to create the best schools and to improve student performance in English, mathematics, science, history and geography.

The idea behind the plan, according to the announcement of its establishment last July, is to look beyond the conventional structure of the school day and school year, and other elements considered standard in American education, and "produce extraordinary gains in student learning, without spending appreciably more money once the schools are up and running."

The Kean way needs attention

WASHINGTON — Between the craftiness of the White House publicity machine and the cynicism of the press, an important opportunity for debating education policy is being lost. President Bush's political advisers love to plop him down in classrooms to show his concern about the future of our children. And reporters so despise the manipulative setting, that when Bush drops in on eighth-graders, as he did again last week, they pretty much ignore what he says.

That's too bad, because what the Bush administration is attempting to do with its America 2000 education initiative is worthy of careful examination — if not the adulation the White House would like to hear.

THE NATIONAL goals set forth by the president and the governors two years ago have won broad acceptance. National measurements, enabling parents to know how their schools and children are really doing, seem to be coming. Secretary of Education Lamar Alexander says that "one way or another — by act of Congress or interstate compact — we'll have the first phase tests by 1993-94."

But how to improve education is still unclear.

To that vital question, the administration is giving not one, but three different answers. One is summed up in the catch-phrase "parental choice" which, bluntly put, is about 90 percent politics. More and more public-school systems are offering students options. The spread of public-school choice programs is, in the words of Michael Timpane, president of Columbia Teachers College, "the great untold story of the past 20 years." It will continue and accelerate.

What the administration is promoting — a brand of "choice" that allows public funds to go to private schools — is a non-starter. It will be blocked by political opposition in Congress and by constitutional challenges in the courts. It's there as a political slogan for the GOP — and not much more.

The real debate is between a strategy that aims at improving the standards and performance of the existing 110,000 public schools and one that would replace them, as fast as possible, with radically different models.

The administration ostensibly favors both the overhaul and replacement strategies. In Congress, especially in the House, where the education lobby is powerful, a bipartisan bill is taking shape that guarantees that today's educational professionals have a strong hand in the overhaul of existing schools.

The administration is not frontally opposing that. But it is putting its bets on the replacement strategy. That is why President Bush met Friday with businessmen who form the board of directors of the New American Schools Development Corporation. They are charged with raising $150 million or more in private funds to finance the work of design teams that will help build "learning environments totally different from today's schools."

Former New Jersey Gov. Thomas H. Kean, who heads the board, told me that after his eight-year struggle in Trenton, he concluded that "to move the existing (education) bureaucracy where it has to go will take an extraordinary length of time. It moves like a glacier. Unless we leapfrog over that, we're going to lose an entire generation."

That kind of talk alarms not just the teachers unions' friends in Congress but leading governors like Colorado's Roy Romer, who has not been afraid to challenge the school bureaucracy in his home state. "That view may be applicable to certain urban areas," he said. "But in Colorado, we can get where we need to get from where we are without dismantling the whole system."

Secretary Alexander's political antennae warn against any clear-cut clash with Congress on this fundamental strategic issue. But he clearly leans to the Kean approach. And so does the president — or he wouldn't have spent all that time on it.

WHAT ALEXANDER told me is this: "We are under obligation to try to improve the schools we've got, but what we're really suggesting is starting over. If we didn't have 110,000 schools, we sure wouldn't design a system that dumps kids out at 3 o'clock when there's nobody home or shuts down school for three months in summer to bring in the crops. My personal conclusion is that it's easier, cheaper and quicker to start over."

That's an issue that deserves serious debate.

Kean to chair national foundation

By ROBERT COHEN
Star-Ledger Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—Former New Jersey Gov. Thomas Kean has been named chairman of the board of a new non-profit foundation that will use both federal and private funding to promote environmental education.

Kean said the newly created National Environmental Education and Training Foundation will provide grants to educational institutions and community organizations to help "increase environmental literacy in schools and throughout the general public."

Kean, appointed to the post by Environmental Protection Agency head William Reilly, said the position is part-time and will not interfere with his primary job as president of Drew University in Madison.

Kean is also the chairman of the New American Schools Development Corp., a corporate-led effort to restructure and reform U.S. schools. In addition, he serves on the boards of the National Endowment for Democracy and the World Wildlife Fund.

The environmental foundation was created by Congress last year, receiving about $1 million in funding. For fiscal 1992, the foundation has received $600,000 from the federal government and hopes to raise $900,000 from the private sector.

Kean said he will not be directly involved in any fund-raising for the foundation.

As chairman of the board, Kean said he will be setting direction for the foundation and channeling money to institutions and groups that are involved in environmental education efforts that could have wide application across the country.

A primary goal of the foundation is to find innovative environmental education and training programs that have a chance of "making a difference at the personal and institutional level in protecting the environment and sustaining our economic development."

The board of directors includes business leaders, government officials and executives of other foundations.

Kathleen B. Connors, president of the foundation, said grants will probably be in the $10,000 to $15,000 range. She said in some cases the grants will provide seed money that will be leveraged by organizations to get additional funds to carry on projects.

Connors said the foundation will not focus on giving answers, but on "raising the level of discussion" about the environment.

"We don't want to come down on one side or the other. We want to stimulate people to think," said Connors.

Dear Mr. President,

I know I am probably asking for the impossible, but as the wife of one of your council members on Physical Fitness and Sports and a close friend of the Chairman Arnold Schwarzenegger, here it goes. I have taken great interest in the youth of our nation, and those who need help. My husband, along with other council members had lunch with you and Mrs. Bush last week and he had mentioned to you the work he is doing for our minorities. Such as the Northwest Youth Summit for Native Americans, in Richmond, Washington on October 12, 1991. Arnold is our key note speaker. Surgeon General Novello committed to me last week in Washington her appearance at this event.

Mr. President neither my husband or Arnold know I am writing to you, I am so very, very proud of what they are doing for the youth of our nation. What I would love to do is support them with you and your wives appearance at this event.

Would this be possible? OBVIOUSLY I AM BEGGING!

Most Gratefully,
