TALKING POINTS

MEETING WITH WHITE HOUSE FELLOWS
JANUARY 5, 1988
THE ROOSEVELT ROOM
4:50 P.M.

- Welcome to the White House. It is a pleasure to have this opportunity to meet with the White House Fellows and their families. The White House Fellowships is an outstanding program designed to expose our Nation's most promising leaders to government policymaking at the highest levels.
- Ever since the perilous days when America struggled for its independence and forged a Constitution, our country has needed leaders of courage, conviction, experience and foresight; and we have found them. The problems and challenges facing our Nation continue to change, but the need for such leaders remains the same.
- The President's Commission on White House Fellowships was instituted precisely to help meet this need. By giving outstanding Americans -- men and women of great character, ability and promise -- the opportunity to serve at senior levels in the Federal government, the Fellowship program makes sure our Nation will continue to be blessed with fine leaders in every field of endeavor.
- Over the past twenty-three years, the White House Fellowships has groomed some of our Nation's finest leaders. I am proud to have so many former Fellows serving in my Administration. Individuals like National Security Advisor Colin Powell and Undersecretary of State Mike Armacost. You can be proud to follow in their footsteps and in the footsteps of other outstanding White House Fellows like General Pete Dawkins, New Mexico Governor Garry Carruthers, and Los Angeles Times publisher Tom Johnson.

- You are extraordinary individuals. You have excelled in your careers, proven yourselves as leaders and have made the time to serve your communities through a variety of charitable endeavors. You teach the illiterate, shelter the homeless, offer your love and guidance as Big Brothers. You are committed to giving back to your communities.
- You are White House Fellows because you believe that you have something to offer the Nation. You have been richly blessed, and believe that you have a responsibility to share those blessings with others. Whether you are working here in the White House or in the departments, you are bringing new ideas and energy to the government. In the future you will be using this experience to enrich your communities or its very likely that you will return to Washington to assist another President.
- During this year you are experiencing the excitement of government service as well as the frustrations. You are learning that most laws and regulations are built through consensus and compromise, but there are principles which can never be compromised. The fellowship will provide you with a unique understanding of the pressures that are exerted on policymakers and will make you key players.

- Your selection as a White House Fellow is a recognition of your abilities and accomplishments, but it is also a challenge. You must continue to excel and lead. You must use your fellowship experiences to do even more with your lives.
- I can see the pride in the eyes of your families. They have every right to be proud. You have already accomplished so much in your lives. I know that you are grateful to your families who have supported you in all of your endeavors and have always encouraged you during the tough times. This year, especially, they understand the demands made on your time and attention. We owe them a debt of thanks for sharing you with the Nation this year.
- Keep up the good work during your fellowship year and beyond. Congratulations and God bless you.

FROM: MARCY HEAD

As we discussed, I would like to request Presidential thank you notes to the people who served on our White House Fellows Regional Selection Panels in March.

In the 11 regional panels, there are a total of 126 panelists. I realize this is a major request, but as you can see from the attached list, many of these people are friends of the President's and I would assume he would want to acknowledge their service.

Please let me know if I should prepare a draft letter or how we should proceed. As always, thanks for your help.
