THE UNITED STATES TRADE REPRESENTATIVE
Executive Office of the President
Washington, D.C. 20506

MAY 28 1992

The Honorable Samuel K. Skinner
Chief of Staff to the President
The White House
Washington, DC 20500

You were scheduled to do this in April but they canceled the luncheon. Do you want to participate now on 6/12.

Dear Sam:

Joseph Gorman, Chairman of the Industry Policy Advisory Committee (IPAC) and Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of TRW Incorporated, Secretary Franklin, and I would be delighted if you could address the IPAC at lunch on Friday, June 12, to be held at the Willard Hotel at 12:00 pm. As you know, unfortunately we had to cancel the April 23 IPAC meeting you had so graciously agreed to speak at due to Secretary Franklin's campaign schedule with the Vice President and my trip to Japan to meet with members of the QUAD. We do hope your busy schedule will allow you to join us June 12.

The IPAC is the key committee within our private sector advisory committee structure for providing manufacturing sector advice on the Uruguay Round, the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) negotiations, and on our many other trade policy initiatives. The committee's views of a Uruguay Round and NAFTA agreement will weigh heavily in the public debate during congressional consideration of successfully completed agreements. The 29-member committee is composed of CEO-level executives broadly representative of key manufacturing interests. For your review, I have enclosed an IPAC membership list.

The IPAC would be most interested in hearing you discuss the President's domestic policy agenda, particularly as it affects U.S. trade. Mr. Gorman has established IPAC task forces to provide advice on the Uruguay Round, on our bilateral discussions with Japan which seek to improve market access to that country, on export control issues, and on the NAFTA negotiations. He has taken special initiative in recent months to focus the work of the committee on strategies intended to enhance the productivity and international competitiveness of United States manufacturing industries.

Your presence would certainly be both timely and the highlight of the meeting. We hope you will be able to join us for lunch on Friday, June 12. If you have any questions, please have a member of your staff contact Brent Krueger at 395-6120.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Skinner:

Thank you for passing my resume along to the White House Personnel Office last winter. The office's staff was very helpful and located several open positions for me within the Administration.

I decided instead, however, to take a position here in Chicago with Rich Williamson's U.S. Senate campaign. So far it has been a great experience, and I am learning a lot about politics here in Illinois.

I will be in Washington on Friday, May 29 and Saturday, May 30, and I was hoping I might be able to stop in and see you at some point. I know you are very busy, and I certainly would appreciate a few moments of your time. I will be available at any time on those two days where your schedule permits.

If you would like to contact me, I can be reached at the Williamson campaign at (312) 641-1992 or at my home in Lake Forest at (708) 234-0131.

Thanks again for all your help, and I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Sincerely,

John E. McGovern, III

The Honorable Samuel S. Skinner
Chief of Staff

Dear Sam:

I would like to invite you to The President's Club Reception and Dinner honoring Vice President Quayle on Thursday, June 4. The Vice Presidential reception begins at 5:30 p.m. in the Columbus Club at Union Station and will be followed by a dinner beginning at 7:00 p.m. in the East Hall at Union Station.

The President's Club is comprised of individuals who contribute at least $1,000 annually to the Republican National Committee. The funds generated by this club help finance the political appearances of President Bush, Vice President Quayle and other Party leaders on behalf of Republican candidates at all levels, as well as our expanding candidate support programs. Recognizing the commitment of these members is vital during a decisive election year for Republicans.

This National Meeting includes a full day of policy and campaign briefings, culminating with the Vice Presidential Reception and Dinner. President's Club members are loyal and dedicated supporters of the RNC and we hope this event will be a memorable experience. Your attendance would help to make our effort successful. Please have a member of your staff contact Katherine Pinney at (202) 863-8720 to advise if you plan to attend or drop by.

I sincerely hope you can join us.

Paolo Maria Fasella, Jean-Pierre Contzen Inaugurate PROTEC

In the 21st century, technologies will be more integrated, and the notion of being the champion in one area will fade not only for economic, but also for technological reasons. By teaming together, companies from Europe and the United States will share the cost and the risk of large programs, they will build strategic alliances for the future, and they will ensure common norms and standards which will provide a wider market access. To examine possibilities for fruitful cooperation between American and European high-technology firms, The European Institute initiated the Project on Transatlantic Technology Cooperation (PROTEC). A one year program, the first working discussions were held on January 16 and February 3 with Paolo Maria Fasella, EC Commission Director-General for Science, Research and Development, and Jean-Pierre Contzen, EC Commission Director-General of the Joint Research Center.

In a brief synopsis of the Community's current position regarding research and development, Professor Fasella remarked that pressure toward greater integration in scientific research efforts at the Community level is increasing. Since the US has always had a centralized market, he noted that it may not yet feel the same need for an expanded supply of services to integrate. However, in today's economy, greater EC-US industry collaboration is necessary for the removal of obstacles which prevent technological transfer and development to take place.

As Director-General of the EC Commission's Joint Research Center, Jean-Pierre Contzen addressed prospects

The Honorable Carl Bildt, Prime Minister of Sweden, addressing The European Institute.

Carl Bildt Sees Sweden in the EC By 1995

When Swedish voters recently rejected the large-scale social welfare system that distinguished Sweden from other European nations for almost six decades, Swedish Prime Minister Carl Bildt formed the current coalition government of Moderate, Liberal, Center and Christian Democratic parties. At an Institute breakfast on February 21, the new Prime Minister presented his views on the transformation of Sweden and its changing role in Europe. He reminded the audience that he supported Swedish membership in the EC during the early 1970s when the Community opened up and Britain, Denmark, Norway, and Ireland applied. At the time, the Swedish government was concerned that the association would jeopardize Sweden's policy of neutrality.

Although economic issues started the debate in Sweden during the 1980s, Prime Minister Bildt emphasized that the unprecedented changes occurring in Europe at the time called for closer political cooperation among European nations. Reporting on Sweden's July 1991 application for EC membership, he pointed to the Commission's task of studying all of the applications currently submitted and establishing an enlargement strategy for consideration at the European Council meeting to be held in June. From Sweden's point of view, he sees a fair degree of political support from leading Community governments to enter into formal negotiations within a year and to conclude them within the framework of a year. One reason he thinks that such quick action would be possible is that, except for agricultural questions, the problems relating to the Treaty of Rome were resolved in the EEA agreement reached in October, 1991. If all goes well, a treaty could be ratified through referendum in conjunction with the 1992 government election, making Sweden's EC membership possible for 1995.

Prime Minister Bildt affirmed that Sweden is ready to take part in the great enlargement processes ahead. With all of the Northern European countries, except Iceland, joining the EC in the near future, a new dynamism will be created, and the region will work to strengthen cooperation across the Baltic with the newly independent nations of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania as well as with the increasingly important regions of Northwestern Russia. ■

Strauss-Kahn on Industrial Policy and Competitiveness

"Industrial policy is a difficult concept for most and I can understand why," remarked Dominique Strauss-Kahn, French Minister of Industry and International Trade, at a European Institute breakfast on February 25. Joined by such US government officials as Gary Blumenthal, Special Assistant to President Bush for Agriculture and Trade, US Senator Bill Bradley and US Congressman Mickey Edwards, Minister Strauss-Kahn expressed his support for liberalized trade but argued that even a true market economy needs to be regulated from time to time. Industrial policy would resolve the conflicts which arise when regulations last for too long.

For example, Minister Strauss-Kahn fears that if only Japan or Korea continues to produce electrical components, other nations will face a longer delay, higher prices and a lost opportunity to fuel the market by producing the tools necessary to manufacture electrical components. He suggested that government help businesses incorporate this technology by financing creative research and organizing greater means to maintain real competition. He also hopes to expand production efforts by encouraging cooperation between companies from different countries. Since this policy would only succeed in an open economy, he affirmed the compatibility of private industrial policy and liberalized trade. ■

Siemens Will Bring Apprenticeship Program to US

Dr. Hans Decker, Vice Chairman of Siemens Corporation, met with European Institute members on January 23 to discuss how private industry can work with state and federally funded vocational schools and colleges to rectify today's gap in the education of the workforce. He explained how Siemens has successfully used the German dual system for vocational education to train high school-aged students in manufacturing and commercial specialties in Germany since 1969, and described Siemens' plans to implement similar work-study programs in North Carolina, Kentucky and Florida. Operating in 49 states and employing 31,000 people in the US, Siemens is open to cooperation with other US and European corporations on this project. ■

Dr. Corrado Pirzio-Biroli Sees Maastricht as a Giant Step Toward the Government of Europe

While he would have preferred to see the Treaty accomplish more, Dr. Corrado Pirzio-Biroli, Deputy Head of the Washington Delegation of the EC Commission, explained at a March 18 Institute dinner that he envisions a changed political landscape in the post-Maastricht Europe. The extension of majority voting provided in the Treaty increases the authority of the Council of Ministers and essentially eliminates individual states' veto power so that the original balance intended by the Treaty of Rome will be restored. He also expects the European Parliament to be Congressman Lindsay Thomas (D-GA) with Mayor Pasqual Maragall of Barcelona (right).

"After the Games, Comes Europe," Says Barcelona's Mayor Maragall

On February 18, during the 1992 Winter Olympic Games, Pasqual Maragall, Mayor of the City of Barcelona, met with the Institute to discuss Barcelona's plans for the Summer Games and its development as a major city within an integrated Europe.

The Mayor discussed the long-term investment of public and private infrastructure and telecommunications projects with members of the US Olympic Committee, and expressed his hope of housing the headquarters of such European institutions as the Eurofed in Barcelona. As a leader of "EuroCities," formed to lobby Brussels on urban issues, he is encouraged by the Maastricht Treaty which, unlike US and Canadian constitutions, reflects the important role of cities. ■ strengthened because otherwise, Germany will not agree to the European Monetary Union. Finally, the Maastricht Treaty recognizes European-scaled political parties as a facet of integration. With a stronger European Parliament, Dr. Pirzio-Biroli expects the transition of the center of gravity of national parties in Europe to move toward European federations of parties. The federations will survey national party activities and ensure that there are no contradictions between a national party's domestic policies and cooperation among parties across Europe. ■

The Transatlantic Influence on Global Environmental Policy

The US has been in the forefront of virtually every major international initiative since the end of World War II. When looking at the US position on current issues, you must remember that larger context. For instance, the environmental community has not given the Administration enough credit for the Clean Air Act. We should understand that the reason the US has been reluctant to accept targets for CO₂ emissions and commit itself to energy-saving policy is because it is the biggest economy and the biggest ships take the longest to turn. I cannot believe that the US will ultimately change its leadership role.

What is different today is that, while no major movement can yet be undertaken without the US, the US does not always have to be first in leadership. I recently said to the Japanese Diet members, "Look, we have all heard of the Japan that can say no, but we would also like to see the Japan that can say yes before the US."

The EC Council of Ministers has recently taken two historic decisions. The first, an EC Commission proposal for a CO₂ tax, would decrease emissions and improve energy efficiency. The other commits the EC Council to fulfilling the concept of renewable resources. There is a whole series of other actions as well. This is the challenge: leadership is coming from the EC. Interestingly enough, the current position of the EC as an entity is in a sense more advanced than any of its individual members, although Germany has given major leadership here.

The US is not going to wait for many more "defeated companies" before it realizes that today's environmental issue is a competitiveness issue. Those who are behind environmentally are going to be behind industrially. If that happened to the US or Canada, it would not be good for the world.

The UN General Assembly decided in 1989 to host a conference on the 20th anniversary of the Stockholm conference. At this conference on environment and development, we will reassess and commit ourselves to a new course of action as we move into the 21st century.

The Earth Summit has the unique challenge to shift the direction of our economic life and to provide a framework within which governments can negotiate the particular arrangements for doing together the things that they cannot do alone. While it will not do everything, it must do enough to give that shift of direction the substance and momentum necessary for achieving major commitments to Agenda 21, our program for the 21st century, to the Earth Charter program, and to explicit commitments on finance and the global environmental facility.

By Maurice Strong, Secretary General of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development

Swiss Federal Councilor Advocates Prudent Approach to Integration

As Switzerland is the EC's second largest customer, its third largest supplier, and provides over a million jobs for EC citizens, Dr. Arnold Koller, Head of the Swiss Federal Department of Justice and Police, asserted that "economically, Switzerland is already better integrated into the EC than many member countries." In light of this economic integration, Dr. Koller took the opportunity of a March 26 Institute luncheon to outline reasons for Switzerland's reluctance to join the EC: the democratic deficit, historic opposition to centralized European powers, fear of loss of influence, and the threat to neutrality.

Dr. Koller considers the EEA the best transition to the EC for EFTA countries, central European countries, and Switzerland, in particular, since, in his view, the Swiss are not yet prepared to vote for full membership. As Switzerland cannot be an island in the middle of the continent, the Swiss government recently declared its goal of eventual EC membership. With the issue of neutrality losing importance, once European security structures are created, the remaining questions are solvable, he concluded. ■

US Treasury Favorable to Foreign Investment in the United States

Dr. Stephen Canner, Director of the Office of International Investment at the US Department of the Treasury, told The European Institute's Transatlantic Business Advisory Committee on December 12, 1991, that the US will continue to welcome foreign investment, not as a matter of blind ideology, but because open investment makes common sense economically. He emphasized that the US also seeks liberalization of investment regimes abroad.

Of the 675 notifications of questionable investment examined in three years, the US Committee on Foreign Investment dismissed all but 13 within 30 days. Dr. Canner described these figures as good news for foreign investors, but the same results provoked criticism from those who seek a more aggressive policy to determine which investments are in the national interest.

Dr. Canner confirmed that the Administration opposes legislation which considers foreign investment, particularly in the high-tech industry, suspect. In any event, foreign investment in the US has decreased from over $25 billion in the first half of 1990 to just over $7 billion in the first half of 1991. ■ for transatlantic cooperation in science and technology with a particular emphasis on industrial competitiveness. He emphasized that industrial research and development is different from scientific research and is prompted by three incentives: short-term financial results; long-term industrial strategies, especially in the pre-competitive stage; and political goals ensuring the overall wealth of a country. For Mr. Contzen, competition and cooperation are not mutually exclusive. In spite of problems involving intellectual property, international information exchange and cooperation is needed today. Mr. Contzen recommends that the EC concentrate on initiatives with "win-win" potential for all partners. A condition which, he said, is more often met in European-American than in European-Japanese projects. ■

European Institute Conference on the Environment

Towards a Transatlantic Environmental Policy

The difficulty of coordinating American and European positions in view of the "Earth Summit" organized under the auspices of the United Nations in Rio de Janeiro this coming June, led The European Institute to organize on January 9-10 an international round table seminar informally gathering leading European and American policy-makers, negotiators, experts, and business executives to compare positions and establish common goals.

For many participants, the discussions moderated by such environmental experts as William A. Nitze, President of the Alliance to Save Energy, Robert Fri, President of Resources for the Future, and J. William Futrell, President of the Environmental Law Institute, offered the first opportunity to address the transatlantic environmental agenda in a systematic manner. Three background reports were authored by Dr. Richard Andrews, Professor and Director of the West European Management and Policy Program, University of North Carolina, Dr. Alberta Sbragia, Professor and Director of the West European Area Studies Program, University of Pittsburgh, and Dr. Zbigniew Bochniarz, Senior Fellow and Director of Central and Eastern European Training Projects, Hubert Humphrey Institute of the University of Minnesota. They provided data on the environmental policies of the US, the EC and Central and Eastern Europe, and examined policy development and

The comparisons of American and European priorities highlighted the complexity of such critical issues as limiting global emissions of greenhouse gases, developing alternative fuels and nature conservation, and illustrated the political and economic benefits of pursuing a joint approach when addressing them. Several topics raised at the Institute's seminar provoked further formal discussions between EC and US official representatives.

* C. Boyden Gray, Counsel to the President of the United States, stressed that market incentives are essential for both internal and international progress regarding global warming and agriculture, and encouraged US trading partners to be more attentive to the realities of market demands. He also advocated using trade as a more efficient method of technology transfer as compared to the grants that have received international support.

*Professor Dr. Klaus Töpfer, German Federal Minister of the Environment, Nature Conservation and Nuclear Safety, explained that Eastern Europe faces environmental and economic problems that no one would have believed possible. Priorities must be rearranged to respond to these problems affecting all of Europe. He reminded participants that the UN meeting will be a conference on development as well as environment and that if Western nations do not confront the problem of poverty, worldwide environmental crises will only worsen.

* Dr. Konrad von Moltke, Adjunct Professor of Environmental Studies at Dartmouth College and Senior Fellow at the World Wildlife Fund, served as seminar rapporteur and compiled a summary of the meeting which is currently available from The European Institute. ■

F. Clifton White has dedicated his life to reminding us that in America, the people rule. In his role as architect of the Goldwater nomination, as advisor to Presidents, as the Director of the Ashbrook Center, and as the founder of the International Foundation for Electoral Systems, Clif has demonstrated an unswerving commitment to the genius of constitutional democracy. He has inspired countless individuals, of all ages and all walks of life, to take charge of their life and get involved in politics and public affairs.

Through the Chair at Ashbrook, we will provide a means for promoting through teaching and research a devotion to the founding principles of our Republic and the recognition of the intrinsic nobility of politics. The goal for the endowment of the Chair is $1 million. Through IFES we support and strengthen the electoral process in the world's emerging democracies. Since 1987, under Clif's leadership, IFES has worked in more than 40 countries around the globe and has been a leader in the worldwide democratic revolution.

I have sent this reproduction of the President's recent great message on ADA and my cover letter to more than two thousand leaders of the disability community. It is well received.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

May 27, 1992

I am delighted to send warm greetings to all those who are gathered in Washington, D.C. for the 45th Annual Meeting of the President's Committee on Employment of People with Disabilities.

The passage of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 marked a great victory for our entire Nation. By requiring the elimination of barriers that, in the past, have prevented many Americans with disabilities from participating fully in the social and economic mainstream of our society, this law will open doors of opportunity to millions of our citizens. At the same time, as more and more persons with disabilities enter and advance in the workplace, all of us will benefit from the contribution of their knowledge, talents, and skills.

The theme of your meeting, "Full and Harmonious Compliance with the ADA," underscores your commitment to the implementation of both the letter and the spirit of this historic legislation. As members of the Committee well know, the ADA is not meant to be an impetus for excessive government regulation and years of costly litigation -- although it certainly provides due legal recourse for victims of discrimination and injustice. Rather, our goal is to make equal opportunity for persons with disabilities a cherished principle in the United States, as well as nationwide policy and practice. The ultimate success of the ADA will require the sustained cooperation of government, business, advocacy groups, and persons with disabilities, and I salute all of you for helping to make the promise of the ADA a reality.

Barbara joins me in sending best wishes for a successful meeting.

PRESIDENT BUSH REAFFIRMS SUPPORT FOR ADA

In spite of the general acceptance of ADA by those members of the business community and public who have received accurate information, people with disabilities have not escaped the political negativism of 1992. During the past few months a handful of longtime disability rights foes in Congress have called for the weakening or repeal of ADA. Pat Buchanan and a small number of other prominent conservative commentators have criticized President Bush for his support of ADA. The spokesperson for Presidential candidate H. Ross Perot was quoted by the Washington Post as referring to people with disabilities in nursing homes as "cripples."

During my recent visits to each of the fifty states – and by telephone and mail – you have expressed concern about rumors that the President was bowing to pressure and backing off on his support for ADA – that ADA regulations had been suspended. I and others have consulted the White House.

1. ADA regulations are not and never were suspended.
2. President Bush and Vice President Quayle remain firm in their support for ADA. I enclose a statement signed May 27 by President Bush.

That is good. The President and his administration – and our friends in the Congress will provide leadership for the implementation of ADA, but Washington can't do the job alone. In the final analysis we of the disability community will implement ADA, or it won't be implemented. We've got to lead the way, to inform, to motivate, to monitor progress in every community. Thanks to you, we have made a great start. But we are a long way from the promised land of equality, jobs, prosperity and full access in real life mainstreet America.

We must continue to meet misinformation with truth. We must train all of our disability community colleagues to be effective ADA advocates, and participants in the democratic process. We must educate all leaders of business and government and operators of public facilities about their rights and opportunities – and help them to comply fully with minimal litigation and maximal profit. We must utilize all media to inform employers that ADA employment protections become effective on July 26, and what those protections are.

The President's Committee, Yoshiko and I personally, will cooperate in any way possible.

I appreciate your leadership for a more just and productive America.
