Dear Congressman McDade:

I'm sorry for the delay in responding to your letter regarding the proposed Survey of Health and Sexual Behavior.

As you know, AIDS prevention efforts are key to controlling the spread of HIV and understanding the magnitude of the epidemic. The proposed survey was developed as a research tool to yield data needed for our battle against AIDS. It is critical that such a study improve our knowledge of HIV and our ability to understand, prevent and control its spread.

On April 7, Health and Human Services Secretary, Dr. Louis W. Sullivan, directed the Public Health Service to conduct a vigorous re-examination of the proposed survey. This re-examination should insure that: the survey is scientifically sound; its questions relate to those research needs essential to the control and prevention of HIV; and that issues of personal privacy are properly balanced against important public health needs.

When the re-examination is complete, the Public Health Service will forward the results of the assessment and final recommendations to Secretary Sullivan.

You specifically expressed concern regarding the participation of Dr. John Gagnon in the survey. He is one of several members of the professional team. The views of the team members are deliberately varied to insure that the overall perspective of the group is balanced and that no single view predominates.

I appreciate your taking the time to write and having your thoughts on this important issue.

Sincerely,

John H. Sununu
