THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

September 7, 1990

Dear Judy,

Thanks very much for sharing with me your thoughts on the future needs of education assessment and, in particular, the need to provide for state-by-state assessments in areas such as science, writing, history, and geography.

We have heard in recent weeks about the need to expand the National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP) to provide the type of state-by-state reporting during the next few years that you have discussed. We are certainly giving this careful consideration and, at the same time, are considering other measurement and assessment approaches in connection with the newly created bipartisan panel involving the Administration, the Governors, and the congressional leadership.

I understand the timing concerns of the 1994 NAEP assessment cycle. We are certainly going to pursue a solid measurement and assessment strategy as soon as we can. After all, we have just barely under a decade to achieve our six national education goals. Let me assure you that as the panel convenes within the next few weeks, this issue will be foremost on its agenda.

Again, thanks for taking the time to write with your thoughts. Nancy joins me in sending you our warmest regards.

Sincerely,

John H. Sununu
