MEMORANDUM FOR JOHN H. SUNUNU
CHASE UNTERMEYER

THROUGH: FREDERICK D. McCLURE
FROM: Brian Waidmann, Special Assistant for Legislative Affairs

SUBJECT: Weekly confirmations report

This is the weekly report summarizing the status of nominations waiting Senate confirmation.

Last week the Senate confirmed 32 nominations. Those confirmed included Clarence Thomas (Appellate Court Judge), John Dunne (Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights) and all remaining political appointments at the Department of Defense. The Senate this week also confirmed nine nominations pending before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

There are currently 95 nominations pending in the Senate. Of these, 14 have been pending longer than two months. Of these, 11 comprise our "priority action list" and this week and next we are taking steps to expedite their confirmations.

In addition, 14 nominations are in legislative clearance.

This report is part of a system Fred McClure and Boyd Hollingsworth wanted implemented to speed Senate confirmations. That process, once fully implemented will include: advising prospective nominees of the Senate confirmation process and what steps they must take to expedite confirmation; making agency Congressional affairs directors accountable for achieving swift confirmation of their agencies nominations, beginning with the first day after a person has been nominated; surrounding controversial nominees with a coordinated team of experienced confirmation experts to handle problems before they arise; providing greater internal White House reporting (of which this report is part); developing recommended policies the White House should consider in handling nominations, particularly with respect to amount and type of information submitted to Congress.

Attachment A lists last week's Senate confirmations.
Attachment B lists nominees on our priority action list.
Attachment C lists status of all nominees pending in the Senate.

Dear John:

As promised, here is a status report on presidential nominations within the jurisdiction of the Senate Commerce Committee.

As you can see, the record of the Commerce Committee has been excellent. The hang-up is in the Administration.

Please let me know if there is any other way in which I can be helpful.

Sincerely,

MEMORANDUM FOR JOHN H. SUNUNU

FROM: C. BOYDEN GRAY CMG

SUBJECT: Convening the Senate

In response to your question last week, attached is a memorandum from the Department of Justice regarding the President's authority to convene the Senate for the special purpose of considering presidential nominees. It concludes that the President does have the power to convene the Senate for that purpose during the August adjournment.

MEMORANDUM FOR C. BOYDEN GRAY
Counsel to the President

Re: The President's Authority to Convene the Senate

The Constitution grants to the President the authority to "on extraordinary occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them." U.S. Const., Art. II, sec. 3. This is stated as a broad grant of authority, and it has, accordingly, been exercised almost fifty times by various Presidents. Most recently, President Truman convened both Houses of Congress to consider the questions of inflation and foreign aid. However, many of those times the President convened only the Senate, often for the purpose of considering whether to give its advice and consent to Presidential nominees. The most recent example was in 1933 when President Hoover convened the Senate so that it could consider President Roosevelt's nominees. To date, Presidents have used their special convening power only between sessions of Congress - either calling Congress into session earlier than scheduled or calling it back into session after the normal end-of-session adjournment. However, the language and purpose of the clause make plain that the President has the power to convene Congress or either House during an intra-session break.

The first President to convene the Senate was President Washington, who issued a "summons" to the Senate immediately following the adjournment of the First Congress. President Washington's summons recited that "certain matters touching the public good requir[e] that the Senate be convened" Senate Executive Journal, Vol. I, pp. 79-84. While the Senate was convened President Washington submitted a substantial number of civil and military nominations. President Washington convened the Senate again on the day of his second inauguration, immediately following the adjournment of the Second Congress. During this period, President Washington submitted to the Senate three nominations. Id. at 138. After the end of the Third Congress, he convened the Senate to consider the Jay Treaty, during which time he also submitted to the Senate a number of nominations.

The Senate was convened by the President many times throughout the 19th century, frequently for the purpose of confirming nominations.¹ In fact, Presidents uniformly convened the Senate for a special session that began on the day of their successor's inauguration. This was done because, prior to the Twentieth Amendment, one Congress would come to a close before the new President's inauguration. Had the preceding President not convened the Senate, it would not have been able to consider the new President's appointments until the start of its next session, which the Constitution sets as the first Monday of the following December.

Although Presidents have traditionally convened the Senate when Congress has been on intersession adjournment, the President's power to "convene both Houses" is not limited to such circumstances. President Truman was advised, and we agree, that "[t]here is nothing in the Constitution to indicate, nor is there any basis for believing, that the President's power to convene the Congress on extraordinary occasions depends on the precise nature of the recess or adjournment, that is, whether the adjournment is sine die, until a day certain, or until the majority leaders of the Congress find it in the public interest to reassemble the two Houses."²

Both the text of the Constitution and the purpose of the provision indicate that the President's constitutional power to convene either House extends to periods within sessions of Congress. His power is stated in the broadest possible terms; it is not limited only to when Congress is not in session.³ This is appropriate to the purposes of the clause -- namely, to ensure that the President can summon Congress to Washington so that Congress and the President together may face a matter of national import. As Justice Story said in his Commentaries on the Constitution:

² Memorandum for the Attorney General from George T. Washington, Assistant Solicitor General, October 17, 1947 (copy attached).

The power to convene Congress on extraordinary occasions is indispensable to the proper operations, and even safety of the government. Occasions may occur in the recess of Congress requiring the government to . . . provide for innumerable . . . important exigencies

J. Story, 3 Commentaries on the Constitution § 1556 (1833).

Moreover, to contend the President lacks the power to convene when Congress is in session but adjourned is to contend that the President may not during time of war, for example, summon Congress to Washington if it chooses to remain absent. Such a contention would also allow Congress, by remaining formally in session but adjourned for most of the time, to defeat the President's constitutional power to convene Congress.

In sum, the Senate has been convened many times and for many reasons. It has considered both nominations and treaties during those times. The Constitution places no limitation on when the President may convene either or both Houses. We therefore conclude that the President has the power to convene the Senate during the planned August adjournment.
